Malicious Destruction Less Than In Past Years

Even the street lights of Front street, Saturday evening, conspired to add to the perverted goodtimes and enhance the spirit of the grotesque and fantastically garbed mob who took possession of and paraded the business section of the city, until an early hour Sunday morning.

There were old ladies with young faces, young ladies with old looking faces, and it was hard to overcoats short men with long overcoats, girls as boys, boys as Belleville Collegiate and While Sisters of Charity. There was Miss Prosperity with her dollars "hand-outs" and "Mr. Prosperity" with white mask and silk hat. There were bobsox, tramps, gypsies, hoboes and the devil, in fact any sort of imps at his heels and all blending into a kaleidoscopic confusion of whistle-blowing, pea shooting, tin-pan rattling, joyous hallowe'en revelry, with no one complaining this their night to their own particular fun, their particular brand of amusement and destruction.

Pedestrian traffic on Bridge of the Hydro office was stopped by unride like and his instrument while an improvised orchestra of such a street parade blocked car traffic on the road; the district control of the Dundas cohorts indulged in spirited argument over certain points on which they had received some place, and the name of his abiding place was the cause of a fight on one corner of it. A White Slater engaged in repartee with Napoleon and Mr. Eric Kluser, during which the demerits of their respective characters were freely referred to and loudly discussed; faces were slapped indiscriminately and the city clergy at Campbell street, two dogs of uncertain parentage were in a fierce, unprejudiced it when one dog removed about a foot of the other's tail, was because the smaller one had a large bow and ribbon attached to his collar by driver of the car, said to be A. J. Gibb, it is understood, left the car a minute with the result that the car went into the ditch and turned over. Provincial Constable Byles of the Ontario Provincial Police is investigating the accident. It is stated that no one was injured.

Money, carefully spent, yet not as noisy, was a boisterous nor malicious as we when we were gangling boys. We thought we were having a glorious night disassembling some farmer's gate, carrying it to the pieceemeal up ladders to the roof of the barn and there reassembling it changed, but often perhaps when we are sitting alone, we can let a reminiscent mood escape us and think back to the days when we were young and we could give the children of the present day lots of pointers. Times indeed have changed.

Hallowe'en is passed for this year and the boys and girls have had their "fling"—dressed in all sorts of grotesque costumes they paraded the streets and enjoyed many liberties which at other times would have been considered very much out of order. There are not to be found on the morrow as there were some years ago, however, a few were located and placed where the owners would have to hunt for them. Also small signs were removed, chairs, which had been temporarily left on verandahs were placed on some one else's verandahs, gates with sign or two were bent to earth and the usual amount of ringing of door bells and playing at wrong-doing was indulged in, but taking it all round, it was not a bad Hallowe'en.

Chief Constable Kidd says that it was one of the quietest since he came to Belleville. Only a few were reported to the Chief Constable and the names of several big boys were taken, who will receive a reprimand and cautioned to keep their fun within bounds or else they go out to celebrate Hallowe'en.

Y's Men's Party

The biggest and most glorious Hallowe'en party yet sponsored, operated and manoeuvered by the Y's Men's Club of Belleville, took place in the Y.M.C.A. Saturday evening when this energetic body were host to the children and youth of the city. The youngsters took forward eagerly, to this event which has now become a yearly institution in their lives. The committee in charge contemplated many of the economies for the festivities this year and certainly the turnout which greeted their efforts over-ran the Y.M.C.A. facilities. The public invitation, intimated 7.45 as zero hour, but by 7 o'clock advanced scouts were storming the objective point, and were after wave following in their wake, by 8 o'clock till 9 o'clock, when the concentrations reached its apex, though ramping up parties continued to arrive for the next hour.

Careful preparations had been made, the night previous, for provisioning the hungry hordes. Quartermaster Ralph Morden and his staff had the food and supply depots to augment their stores. However, accompanying the dire need, this was attained right nobly, and the troopers also received hot chocolate, apples, nuts and candy.

300 in Attendance

It was a great and awesome gathering of every description, that eventually packed the floor of the gymnasium, which was gaily decorated in all manner of costumes, while the balcony was filled with parents, friends, and the non-participating populace in general. Ingenuity, more than elaborate costuming in the selection of dress and make-up, was the keynote, and Mr. Tom and Mr. Jones, Mr. Jones and nigger, nevertheless were still there. The gym. floor was cleared, did it matter anyway, as long as you were "dressed up" for Hallowe'en.

After a parade around the streets and a short intermission, judging of costumes took place when awards were made as follows: Miss Mary Mason Mazzall, of the O.S.D.; best colored person, Kathleen Lafferty; Most Comical Lady, Antonio Schlafgot; boy representing grit, Billy Brown; best personality, Betty Hall and Jean.

Then stunts were next the order of the hour and prizes of two pound boxes of candy went to Miss Gordon Adams, George Bostnart, O.D.S., Dorothy Taylor, George Moxam, Catherine Lafferty, Jean Mitchell and Alma Sadders. Next followed the grand march, concluding with Hallowe'en custom, when the fortune tellers commenced operations in the various events: Apple eating, Lemon sucking, Flour and Kalamde; ducking for apples, Buster Hogle, Gerald Pointer, Will Peck and Jack Sippell; Nuts and Bolts, Reg Asseline, Raymond Dolan and Charles Armstrong; O.S.D. marshmallow eating, Freda Smith and Jean Stewart; pie eating, Jack Ackerman; chocolate eating, Earl Kinsella, Rose Burbury and Edna Sharpe. Then came the climax with the distribution of Hallowe'en cheer and treats, which left a pleasing sentiment of much noise and joyfulness, which will be long in Memory conducted broke up and their charges were guests-for-the-day homes or continued adventure in the streets.

Mr. A. D. Sends Delegation

The Ontario School for the Deaf at Belleville sent a delegation of girls to participate in the festivities and they joined in the general fun with their more fortunate brothers and sisters.

Mayor Ellis, Alderman Griffin and Superintendent Petterly of the Y.M.C.A. were also interested spectators of this fine achievement on the part of the Y's Men's Club. And to this whole-hearted organization, and to Mr. Tom Jones, the Belleville children, but that of their parents as well, for the spontaneous enjoyment and fun of Hallowe'en in 1931.

Raspberry Pie Made from Berries Picked In Garden Sunday

Almost any kind of pie is good from the beef and kidney variety right up to the semi-sweet of culinary pie art, the thick, juicy blueberry creation. Near the top, however, ranks one made of nice, fresh, red raspberries and it is mighty seldom that a pie made from raspberries, and for this ingredient, is forthcoming in November.

Nevertheless, such a pie 'adorned' (for a short time) the dinner table of Mr Herbert L. Collins, Dundas St., yesterday afternoon, for, families having picked over sufficient raspberries from her garden Sunday to serve for this purpose.

Mr. Collins showed a representative of this paper, the well capped pie upon which he takes great pride and interest. Many branches showed bloom while others were mature or ripening fruit, and that is some reason for a berry orchard on the first day of November.

Thirteen Quart Drink of Wine Saved Villagers in 1631

Hallowe'en of 300 Years Ago Today Memorial Affair

Rothenburg-on-the-Tauber, Germany, Oct. 31 (AP) — That gallant old city today flowed down stream since the Hallowe'en of 1631, but there is retained a quart of wine that inhabitants of this picturesque town cherish more than anything else since that date.

Just three hundred years ago today, Mayor Emeritus Nusch drank as he drank dregs before rout of sheer loyalty to his fellow citizens. His mighty swig of wine saved the necks of Rothenburg's forefathers and the priceless medieval architecture that draws thousands of tourists to the town annually.

Rothenburgers of many generations have been duly appreciative and have indulged in commemorating the event each year by a pageant. There was to have been a pageant this year but have had to dispense with its rule of economy put a stop to plans. The municipal council of the capital settled to acknowl that nothing will keep the throats of those who made history in Rothenburg from appearing on Hallowe'en.

The real pageant that Rothenburgers have performed every Hallowe'en for the relaxation of themselves and tourists is true to history with the exception of the drinking episode. No actor has ever been found capable of emptying the precious goblet. It all goes back to General Tilly of the Imperial army, the hoary man of Central Europe.

The devastation of the thirty years' war can be blamed on Tilly. His troops plundered Rothenburg, wrecked churches, razed walls, and killed off leading citizens. Last to save the survivors, Magdeburg, the pride of the Elbe, was at hub-heap when he got through with it.

Rothenburg made the General specially furious. Week after week his troops tried to scale the sturdy town walls. But the burghers—their good wives at their elbows—routed them, by gosh, every time. Valor down their backs and pelting them with rocks.

Finally the little besieged town's ammunition gave out and the white flag was hoisted. Tilly's troops marched in with flelding fingers. Plundering began. The town councillors were to be beheaded.

A potent glass of Rothenburger wine made Tilly jubilate. "Let the dogs live," he commanded. "I'll give 'em a chance." Then imposed the condition that one of the townsmen lift off each his thirteen-quart goblet in one draught.

Old Nusch, who had one foot in the grave anyway, volunteered. He loosened his belt and quaffed without a stop. Tilly roared life's blood was in trickle. He made good his word, asking only a mere 6,000 gulders for ammunition.

Piles All Gone

Itching, bleeding, protruding piles go quickly and don't come back. If you remove the cause. Bad blood, circulation at the hemorrhoidal veins causes piles by making the affected parts weak, flabby, almost dead. WOMAN DIPLOMAT

It had been said that women are more diplomatic than men, but it remained for Senora Dolia Robber de Andrews, wife of the Panamanian Minister to Cuba, to break all Latin-American diplomatic traditions and take the post of charge d'affaires to the Legation in Havana. Senora de Andreve is the first woman in Latin America to assume such a post.

His father Samuel Edison, Jr., was born in Digby, the capital of Digby County, according to D. C. Youth Makes Flight Studied Few Hours

Saint John, N.B.—Pat Sclanders fifteen-year-old student in grade 9 Saint John High School, made his first solo flight recently at the civic airport after five hours and forty minutes dual instruction. He believed the youngest airman in New Brunswick.

The world is a world of aeroplanes. The walls of his room are plastered with pictures of planes and aviators he has admired from afar and aviators he has met at the airport. Most of his spare time is spent either visiting the airport or reading about flying.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Sclanders, 38 Duke street, Pat has been "air minded" since he was ten years old and during that time now that he does not know about such things as tonnage, net and gross, horsepower, rudder, wing area, fuselage, lifting tension and the like. When only thirteen he won from an aviation magazine a prize for having the greatest number of errors in a technical description of a certain type of plane. The prize was a leather helmet and a pair of goggles which were recently shown to this scribe.

Pat earned the money for flying lessons himself, working at the civic airport for the Fan American Airways during the summer holidays and writing paragraphs for an aviation magazine published in New York. His instructor had, incidentally, his hero, Captain C. H. Kent, of the Saint John Flying Club, referred to Pat as a "natural" airman when the lad made his solo, taking off and landing with the fashion of a real veteran. But Pat's magic touch is that his whiskers won't grow. It seems that the well-dressed aviator should wear a moustache.

It is believed that the banana plant is particularly perpetual; the exact age when bearing ceases has never been determined.

An edible berry larger in size than the raspberry but yellow in color, is found on the shores of Hudson Bay.

LAST JOURNEY WALTER SCOTT

Financial Crash of 1826 Ruined Novelist and Affected Health

Something more than 100 years ago Sir Walter Scott was spending a few weeks in London before starting on what proved to be his last journey. He had started from Abbotsford on September and had left London on October 22 for Portsmouth, whence he sailed a week later on H.M.S. Barham, the frigate which the Admiralty had placed at his disposal.

Since the financial crash of 1826, which made him a ruined man, Sir Walter had toiled unremittingly to defray the debt of £117,000, for which, although not legally liable, he had most honorably made himself responsible. In six years he paid off more than half the amount, but his efforts was too much and by 1831 his health became so far the total prostration of body strength...besides some mental confusion he himself describes it, and he agreed to try a Continental tour.

Remained For Country

He remained in London four days, staying with Cadell, Scott's publisher, at 24 Sussex place, Regent's Park, a house which remains today very much as it was then, except that it is now furnished with two bathrooms while formerly it possessed none. Not a few of the entries he made in his "journal" are connected with the Reform Bill riots, although suffering as much in mind and body, Sir Walter was still able to take a keen interest in current affairs, and his grave concern for the future welfare of the country is ample to be understood from the comments on those anxious times he jotted down day by day. Some idea of the extent of Scott's weakness may be obtained from the entry in which he records his attempt to walk to Lady Louisa Stuart's, who lived in Manchester place, a little more than a mile. Slower place, he writes, "about a little vertigo," he writes and came back."

Enjoyed Theatres

Not a few of Sir Walter's friends, who had entertained him during his various previous visits to London, had passed away, but among the familiar faces still left to cheer and comfort him was that of the kind and amiable Mrs. Hughes, whose husband was a Canon of St. Paul's, and whose grandson afterwards wrote "Tom Brown's School-days." In her "Recollections of Sir Walter Scott" she mentions that Scott so much enjoyed some theatres he ate at her house in America (these as it is now, the residence of the Canons) that she went to Shrewsbury to order a supply to be sent to Sussex place, she was told that it was not customary to send so far, whereupon she said she was sorry, as the theatres were intended for Sir Walter Scott.

Fishmonger Electrified

The world could like magic. The rough fisherwonger pushed his way forward to Mrs. Hughes and cried out:

"Sir Walter Scott—did you say, madam! Sir Walter Scott—God bless my soul!—he shall have them directly if I carry them myself—Sir Walter Scott!—they shall be with him tonight!—then pulling—"No, not tonight—for tomorrow morning at 6 o'clock a fresh cargo comes in, and he shall have them for his breakfast."

He accompanied on the tour by his younger son, Charles, Sir Walter visited Abbotsford, Wilkie, eight months totally exhausted, he was back in London and stayed three weeks at the St. James' Hotel, Jermyn street—a tablet unveiled last year by Mr. Ramsay Walpole marks its site—before he was taken back to Abbotsford to die.

Concurrent Sentences Given Two Youths

Reginald Scriven, Grant Potter and Lorne Gibbs appeared before Magistrate Floyd of Cobourg on Friday afternoon on a charge charged with breaking, entering and theft from a garage in that village. The boys elected trial by magistrate and pleaded guilty to the offence. Sentence on account of his youth and good behavior was given a suspended sentence of two years, while the other two were given three months each terminate in the Ontario Reformatory to run concurrent with the sentences imposed on Reginald Pollie and Ernest Pollie. O. Boggs, Crown Attorney, of Northumberland and Durham, prosecuted and the boys were defended by R. D. Arnott of Porter, Payne and Arnott of this city.

OCTOBER RASPBERRIES

Brantford, Ont., Oct. 21— (CP) —Pali weather means nothing to residents of this district. Today Ernest Shaw, son of a Scotland District farmer, brought in a dish of raspberries from the garden and said there were plenty more on the bushes.

LACK OF RAIN SHOWED

Halifax, N. S.—In addressing the Rotary Club at a luncheon here recently on "Prairie Gold", Rev. J. A. He told humorously in this connection of the many three-year-old frogs who have not learned to swim yet.

Miners are Rescued after Four and Half Days' Entombment

Collapse of Rocks Keep Miners Prisoners Since Saturday

RESCUE THRILL

Mocanaqua, Pa., Oct. 30—Rescue workers shortly after 6 o'clock this morning brought out alive two of the six miners entombed last Saturday by an explosion at the local mine of the West End Coal Company. The others are dead. Those rescued are John Tomashunis, 40, father of seven children and Joseph Matzoni, 22, nine officials said. Both were in excellent condition considering they had been buried alive for five and a half days, both will survive the ordeal, physicians said.

A crowd of about 200 were waiting at the mouth of the mine as Tomashunis and Matzoni were brought in an ambulance. The machine did not leave before the crowd was Mrs. Tomashunis. She was taken to the mine offices where physicians said her fear for her husband was in good condition.

"When I got the message that he was all right I felt just as if I had come from the dead," she said.

From rescue workers it was learned that two of the dead men had been killed instantly by the force of the explosion, and that the other two had been victims of afterdamp.

Novak, a brakeman, had gone out of the entry to get a bucket just as the explosion ripped through that part of the shafts. He and Thomas, a laborer who was working nearby were instantly killed. Monitotis and Gallagher were uninjured by the blast but they ventured out too soon afterward and fell victims to afterdamp.

Tomashunis and Matzoni had been entombed about 133 hours.

Fear Wheat Traders Much Too Bullish

Winnipeg, Man., Nov. 2—(By The Canadian Press)—Speculators in wheat futures pondered today whether the Winnipeg market had over-run itself in a bullish enthusiasm denied traders for many months or if spectacular gains were only a start for the long trek back to "dollar-wheat."

Today's market stood 5 7-8 cents higher in price than a week ago. It had advanced 10 2-4 cents in the week. Climaxed yesterday by a 7 1-2 cent rise, the week's net gains was by far the largest since wheat dropped below a dollar a bushel more than a year ago.

Last year Canada's lobster fishery yielded a catch of over 40,752,000 pounds and was second only to salmon fishery in point of market return, the value being $2,215,000.

ASKS TEACHER TO COOPERATE

Slogan for Children is Used to Stress Ear and Eye

Halifax, N. S.—A personal appeal has been sent to every school teacher in Nova Scotia by Hon. Percy C. Black, minister of highways, who asks assistance for the safety branch of the department in its endeavor to protect the lives of school children, "the future citizens of the province."

Calling attention to the fact that motor traffic is increasing yearly, crease in danger, the minister notes carrying with it a corresponding in that in 1929 twelve school children between the ages of 5 and 16 lost their lives under the wheels of automobiles; and in 1930, through the co-operation of teachers the number was reduced to nine. So far this year six children, all under the age of thirteen, have been fatally injured in motor accidents.

At the bottom of the letter the minister suggests a slogan "Use your eyes and ears before you use your feet," and in numerous schools the teachers are required: their pupils to write and rewrite this slogan in order to impress upon them the importance of the message

CITY'S PROGRESS

Though the depression has been in progress for well over two years progress has not halted. Belleville has seen new industries launched even at the time when the clouds of slump were the darkest, and yet these are controlled by men who see the way clear ahead. Conditions begin to indicate that there is a turn ahead of that the turn has come. Whether this is actually the case or not remains to be seen, because it is true that it is often difficult to state just when a turn of this kind comes and what is the motive which starts the revival.

Though the slump Belleville has been progressing. Her citizenship has grown in numbers as the figures of the city assessor indicate, putting the city this year for the first time in the fourteen thousand class. If the end of the slump is here then this city has survived the ordeal well.

If the future is as bright—and there seems no reason to believe that it will not be—as its immediate past, interesting days are ahead in Belleville.

BUYING CAMPAIGN

A campaign of buying has been inaugurated in the United States. This will succeed if it gains sufficient following, and this is questionable. The purpose is to get enough people involved and interested as to swing this movement. Whether they have reached their extreme depth is difficult to say but it is likewise true that they probably may be saved from sinking to still lower depths by some such movement. Sooner or later people have to come to buy to replace the things which have disappeared or have worn even if there have been too great spending by every country in the world, which has complicated the disaster caused by individual extravagance.

If there had been a dramatic turn in business during the last year, it is undoubtedly that some depths which have been plumbed might not have been reached. A buying campaign may start a revival which is sorely needed. When prices commence to rise then there will be regrets that goods were not bought in expectation of stronger prices. Many think the supreme opportunity is now here, and that the first signs of an upturn are already visible.

THEIR EXPERIENCE

Youth entered into the spirit of Hallowe'en with much of the zest of the old times. Never before has there been such ing and causing amusement and in having pleasure. Youth goes to the trouble of making up for the one night of all nights of the year when the masquerader is the only celebrant. Youth and childhood are not the costly, but they are the gay. And nothing in Hallowe'en except a superstition, but boys and girls see in it the opportunity to release their imagination and fancy and to new experiences.

Such experiences as the young who celebrated on Saturday night with the Friday night as vital an any other experience in their existence. So why should they not be cultivated? In that respect this will be in as many others Hallowe'en observance is a good thing.

HALLOW'EN SPOOKINESS

Montreal Gazette wittily philosophizes upon the spookiness of Hallowe'en in these words:

"Antique is this? Well, most good things can claim this privilege. It belongs to black cats, witches, elves, brownies, banshees, and the whole spookiferous tribe of demonic "casuals" who are adepts at performing sprightly tricks unbeknownst in the dim corridors of our most uninhibited world.

"The grand pantomime comes on after daylight saving time has expired its lease, when, forsooth, under the moon glimmer there is an aerial demonstration of the cone-capped broomstick —witches flitting about like cat-flies around an arclight, to torment the old man in the moon. Or if there is no moonlight in evidence, then the eyes of any black cat can spark electrical flashes from under the verandah, or along the edge of the roof, just as though the blessed chimney were afire. And, indeed, has not one of our modern pundits just announced that a live cat's brain is spooky? It was not the exact term he used. He said the cat brain is radio-active. And for that matter so are wobbling apples and sizzling chestnuts, and candlesticks and soot-flakes. The difference between the real thing and the occult is just a bit of wallpaper. It is a mere jingle of words. Whatsoever is not physical is psychical. Every well-versed Hallowe'ener knows this. Let the dubious read Mrs. Crowe's "The Night Side of Nature', or the more get-at-able 'Demonology and Witchcraft." If this presentment of the cast for ghostly activities does not carry, the uninitiated may be left to their own invincible ignorance. They may take themselves to the subtle reservations of Mr. Crabbe, namely, that belief in ghosts is the last lingering fiction of the human brain."

LET US BE BRAVE

By Aline Michaelis

Let us be brave. What can we fear,
Another day, another year?
Ah, no; however long we stay
The days we dawn except today!

One day alone is yours and mine,
Tomorrow's sun may never shine;
This day, this only, we can take
And patterns of rare beauty make.

Let us be brave. "Why fear the past?
Its black abysses, vague and vast?
Can never yawn before our way;
We have today, and but today!

Let us be wise. Why should we strive
To make forecasts? The days arrive
In single file, and one by one
Their joys are clasped, their tasks are done.

Be brave, be wise; and this is all.
Tomorrow's shadows may fall;
Today alone for you and me
To live, throughout eternity.

GIVE A MAN A JOB is a good idea and there should be many odd jobs just now for the unemployed. Storm windows and doors to put on, leaves to be raked, gardens fixed up for the winter, wood to be cut, etc. Even an hour's work will help because there must be many odd hours' work to be done with an aggregate which would give work to a number of men.

THE WAGES OF SIN for Al Capone included a palace in Florida, a million dollars, and a bullet in the head for better times. The personal debts and domestic troubles also has been epidemic for long months past in long distance calls. It is hard to say if an improvement in trade caused by stocks rising will help them or if they have to be replenished, is hard to say. It may be that all those are trifling things after all.

Anyway, the feeling is here. Almost every man you meet says this: "Don't you think things are getting a little better? And of course you do.

And after all things are not exactly what they are but what you think they are.—Toronto Telegram.

POPULAR SELF-GOVERNMENT

In Britain the sound qualities of common sense, or practical discretion of most fortunate historical incidents, has given the responsible system a center of gravity, balance and sentimental power, That center is the throne. The sovereign is clear of both power and responsibility in politics, but has a large undefined and undefinable leadership of social life in its widest and most comprehensive sense. It is by this thus be seen that one great beauty of this whole system is that it is a practical method of popular self-government.

Now self-government is the very reverse of government by some outside authority. Government of the people as a whole can only be by the people as a whole. In practice such self-government is possible only by centralization among the people. To prevent such concentration or to make it ineffective is to make popular self-government impossible—Ottawa Citizen.

TOO MUCH HURRY, SAYS GUARDIAN

Manchester, Nov. 3—The Manchester Guardian, in an editorial yesterday criticized Prime Minister R. B. Bennett of Canada for acting "in too much of a hurry" in his desire to re-assemble the Imperial Economic Conference as soon as possible.

The Guardian says difficulties which prevailed heretofore have not been removed from the situation.

Since the Government of British Columbia, took over the Peace River Block last fall, 121,200 acres of free land has been pre-empted for residence and improvement.

Other Papers' Opinions

NEED OF CANADIAN LOCALE

Some sound advice was given to Canadian authors yesterday by John Burroughs, the well known English essayist. While he finds our literature of a surprisingly high average, he deprecates the lack of Canadian locales. He thinks Canadian writers should themselves be distracted by London and New York to the detriment of his native country, when it comes to backgrounds and settings for stories, and that it would be better to portray true Canadian scenes and situations.

There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Burroughs has put his hand upon a real need. There are very few novels about Canada, and the people of Canada—novels that would convey to people outside Canada a clear idea of the Dominion, its inhabitants, their ideals, their methods, their mentality. Yet that is the sort of novel we need if our fiction is to progress in anything more than the publishers imprint.

Mr. Burroughs sees a new national development and one of standards of judgment needed for the young writers of this country.—Montreal Herald.

"DUNCES" WHO BECAME GENIUSES

It doesn't always follow that the brilliant schoolboy becomes the man a celebrated career in after life nor does the so-called dunce of the years become a lawyer of wood and drawers of water in manhood. There are specific cases on record that a pupil showing signs of stupidity in academic studies may develop into a genius in other lines.

John A. Lister, writing in the Friends' Intelligencer gives a list of people who made poor progress in school although showing a later manifested real genius. Here are a few examples:

Charles Darwin never could learn a language.

Sir Isaac Newton was next to lowest in his form. He failed in mathematics because he took no problems the way the book said he should.

Oliver Goldsmith was at the very bottom of his class.

James Watt, inventor of the steam engine, was the butt of his schoolmates' jokes.

G. Genoni, co-discoverer of radium, was an idler in school that his parents took him out.

From this we may parse one mistake when they discourage their children because of backwardness in certain subjects. The all-important thing is to see that the children put forth earnest efforts.—Kitchener Record.

FEELING GROWS BETTER

If prosperity is a state of mind as wise men aver then Canada has turned the corner and is headed for better times. The personal depression and pessimism which has been epidemic for long months past is being dissipated as it is plain that has come a feeling that things are on the mend.

Whether this feeling owes its origin to the improved outlook in the wheat situation or to Tuesday's elections, which show that the heart of the people is sound, or to an improvement in trade caused by stocks rising, or to all of them they have to be replenished, is hard to say. It may be that all those are trifling things after all.

Anyway, the feeling is here. Almost every man you meet says this: "Don't you think things are getting a little better? And of course you do.

And after all things are not exactly what they are but what you think they are.—Toronto Telegram.

Earthquake Causes Severe Damage

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 2 (AP) — Despatches from Oaxaca, Mexico's earthquake centre, indicated severe damage may have resulted from a shock that was felt here Sunday at 5:37 P. M. yesterday.

Excelsior's correspondent said the earthquake was very strong, causing the populace to flee into the streets, and many fell to their knees praying. The electrical power failed and some houses collapsed, but there was no reports of casualties.

British Columbia is the only part of Canada where apricots are grown, commercially and this year the crop is estimated at 49,231 tons, which is exclusive of 394, per cent over last year.

Letters to the Editor

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir—While at a meeting of the unemployed on Wednesday night I heard several refer to the names of the committee absent, of Welfare and Social Service Work during this coming winter. Is it because of our financial standing, and because we are turned down? Is it what do the rich care for the sufferings of the poor, and how many their misfortunes are growing more ominous every day? Can we who are sending from coast to coast, where opportunity not find ways or means to save hundreds of thousands of workers and farmers in this rich, young nation from galloping toward a premature end? Poorly housed, scantily dressed and deprived of nourishing food, their weakened vitality makes them easy victims for that grim reaper, Death. Who is to blame for the withered hand of want extending from coast to coast, where thousands of men, women and children, despite the necessities of life, are forced to accept charity or enter the contents of garbage cans? The ruling class are not responsible for this terrible depression. It was the big boys that fattened on the parasitic drunk was going to stay forever, and dumpheads and over-capitalised everything. The unemployed are not asking for charity or money—scorn the idea, all they want is work, but there is no work to be found, therefore it is up to everyone who can to help the other fellow. The committee has met each year when towns want cleaning of leaves, furnaces to prepare for the winter, storm windows to be placed, etc., we could be able to give employment men a few hours' work doing this and thereby help him and his family for an hour or two.

No doubt the Mayor is doing his utmost to relieve the misery in our city, but while he is preparing dozens of families are suffering. No doubt certain there are amongst them who still retain their family pride and would starve before they'd ask for relief. Notification of a case where there has been no coal in the home for days has been brought to the meetings of the unemployed, also a case where the husband sought to end the misery of his family and himself and received the magnificent amount of grocery to the value of $1.00 per week. Now can we who call ourselves citizens of Belleville, conscientiously say that this is welfare or social service as we intend it to be carried out, thus knowing personally some of the committee appointed—Major Reid, I know they will not allow this state of things to continue if they only get together and do it once, and not wait until it is too late or see what others are doing.

INTERESTED.

Editorial Note—Every effort is being put forth by the civic relief committee and through the press to find seasonable work for those men who are out of work. Citizens are urged to call every second week for the occasional job to men who are idle. This can be done by the use of the coupon published in the newspaper, to be filled in by the person who has work to be done and to be sent to the Employment Service Office, Campbell street, or telephone 387

DEFICIT OF 200 MILLIONS

Hepburn, Liberal Leader, Makes Prediction at Guelph

Guelph, Ont., Nov. 2 (CP)—The Conservative Government of Ontario was accused of "reckless extravagance" by Mitchell F. Hepburn, Liberal leader of the latter, when he addressed the nominating convention of South Wellington Liberals here tonight. He predicted a Federal deficit of two hundred million dollars this year.

The convention named D. Paul Hume, Guelph barrister, as Liberal candidate to contest the Provincial by-election necessitated by the recent death of Hon. Lincoln Goldie.

Mr. Munro is secretary of the Liberal Association of the riding. In the polling November 18, he will face W. P. Gamble, Conservative.

Provincial Finances

Mr. Hepburn dealt at length with Provincial finances in his address to the large gathering. He said the province was behind to the tune of about $2,000,000 a year through the reckless extravagance of the Tory machine" and he believed retired at the rate of over by three millions annually.

"The people are going to put on the brakes," he added.

The Liberal leader called on the province to consider where it now had a single asset for the expenditure of $5,000,000 on the Queenston Power and Transmission Company scheme. The Ontario Hydro Commission he charged, "is now merely a distributing plant for a few private concerns."

After discussing the Beauharnois Power Corporation scheme, Federal fund contributions, Mr. Hepburn continued: "It is wrong that a political party should need to have campaign funds. There will be no funds coming into this riding."

Russia Fails World's Wheat Export Ceases for Two Years

Prices Rise on Wheat Exchange 37 Per Cent. Already

CARRYOVER NEEDED

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—Wheat futures were carried to new high levels for the season's duration on the heels of buying, largely influenced by Russia's difficulties in fulfilling its export grain contract. For the first part quite recently, the Soviet continue in months all wheat contracted finished the day about sixty cents a bushel.

From the start of the short season bulls were in control, and the gains continued sporadically despite extensive profit-taking.

In addition to the apparent optimism that had begun to permeate the trade since the reappearance of public participation, one important factor stood out in the day's news to explain the wave of buying orders. That was Russia's forced repurchase of wheat in the market, necessitated by a smaller crop than had been anticipated and larger unfilled export orders.

Only Thirty Per Cent. Exported

The Russian Government was reported to have collected only 30 per cent. of the wheat it had expected this month.

"The Chicago Board of Trade took on a cheerful aspect with large orders pouring in and prices going higher.

George S. Milner, head of the Grain Stabilization Corporation, stated the Farm Board's hands in stabilizing grain had been reduced by "a dry sum," and that "we will cut our holdings down some more."

"We have sold since July 1 more than 67,500,000 bushels," he said. "Of this, 47,500,000 went to foreign governments, leaving about 20,000,000 bushels of the 40,000,000 bushels and more in other channels.

It is said that Russia will not export wheat this year or next.

With predictions that wheat will soon sell above $1.00 a bushel being voiced in the pits of the Chicago Board of Trade, grains continued to advance in foreign markets. The wheat upward trend has increased wheat prices 37 per cent. in the Chicago exchange and gains in proportion, as and other grains in Canada for the United States and Canada for breadstuffs they had expected from Russia.

Reports that Norway had joined the ranks of the countries which left the American grains helped to advance May wheat 1½ cents to a new high here in the day. Before the market's close wheat had reached a new high for the year at 68¾ cents, closing at 68 cents.

Advance In Argentine

Liverpool's wheat prices advanced 1 to 2½ cents, while every export quotation on the Winnipeg Exchange had advanced a cent or two cents to new high prices for the Canadian 1931 crop.

An advance of 2¼ to 6½ cents a bushel was recorded at Rotterdam, Europe's largest grain market, where much of Russia's wheat had been stored.

Russia was reported to be making sales of its wheat to the extent of 1,000,000 bushels of its wheat now in British markets, but returned to the Soviet government, while private interests representing France were reported again making concessions to the Federal Farm Board in anticipation of French needs in the next three months.

No Exports Two Years

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 2.—(By the Canadian Press)—The Toronto Globe today publishes the following copyrighted cable from its European correspondent:

"It can now be said quite definitely that Russia will not export no wheat this year or next. This statement was made to me by Mr. Dovgalevsky, Soviet Ambassador to France. The Ambassador added that the decision to discontinue the policy of wheat dumping by his country was made before the signing of a new trade agreement with France.

As the Soviet Union exported a full 110,000,000 bushels last year and the wheat crop in other European countries is decidedly of low quality, Mr. Dovgalevsky's announcement means a change in the Soviet's policy ought to be a considerable benefit to Canada, for the reduction of the wheat supply thereby obtained will be more than sufficient to absorb the heavy carry over shown at the close of the last crop year in the Dominion.

Wheat Exports

As a result of Russia's proposed inactivity on the one hand, and the demands of China on the other, wheat exports are most likely to be increased by the country's customers. It is means that total exports from the four wheat-producing countries — Argentina, United States, Russia and Canada — will exceed 900,000 000. In Australia and the Argentine the wheat crop will be considerably affected by the bad weather and the appearance of destructive parasites. All these factors improve Canada's situation, and make it more likely that the Canadian crop of this year and the carry-over of last will be disposed of at a good premium.

CELEBRANT RUN DOWN

Kitchener, Ont., Nov. 2.—Robert Smith's celebration of Hallowe'en may cost him his life. Smith, aged 40, with a party of merrymakers, was pushing a wagon down Victoria street on Saturday when he was struck by an automobile. He is in the hospital in a critical condition, suffering from a fractured thigh and collarbone and internal injuries.

SAFELY ELECTED

Former Provincial President Luis M. Sanchez Cerro of Peru, not only has just been permanently elected head of the Peruvian Government, but has lived to escape bullets of revolt, which fired upon his home from an automobile.

MOBILIZATION FOR WELFARE

From the enthusiasm with which the first meeting of the unemployment relief committee has been received there is no doubt of the success of the campaign and that the objective will be quickly raised.

The local Ministerial Association is taking the question up and in all probability an appeal will be made from all city pulpits next Sunday for active co-operation of all with the committees at work.

All committees have been made as small as possible so that more efficiency will result, large committees being cumbersome and slow, but no citizen need feel offended if his or her name does not appear on a committee now for there will be work for all who wish it before the campaign as mapped out is over. Volunteers for duty can phone the secretary day and they will be notified, if required.

Reports from the various relief wards urgently needed were completed by the committees and immediate action taken to ensure a roof over their heads and the attention of their needy furniture.

The situation in Belleville is not nearly as acute as in most other cities, but it is not the intention of the city authorities to allow any family suffer for want of food, fuel and proper clothing, especially must the little children be protected.

Every winter there are a number of families who have to be looked after and helped with food and fuel to augment their own slender resources. The Women's Christian Association have always looked after this work but of late years the work has been growing greater and last winter there were over two hundred families on the list of the W.C.A. This winter with less employment more families will be added to the list, hence the necessity for the civic committee to assist the W.C.A. and all the other civic welfare organizations by coordinating the entire civic welfare work under one head.

Men out of employment, who have registered with the city officials for work, number over three hundred and as much work as possible is being provided by the city, and the work related as much as all may have a share in the work. However, there is only seven days a week and perhaps none next week does not go very far in keeping a family and other relief will be needed. As much work as possible will be provided by the City Council and with the assistance of the general relief committee none should be no suffering this winter either from lack of food or fuel or clothing.

G. A. C. Weir is chairman of the Finance Committee of the Civic Unemployment Relief Committee, and the City Treasurer, Harry Stock, is treasurer of the committee and will receive all relief moneys and pay out the same as per direction of the committee, all disbursement checks to be countersigned by the chairman of the Relief Finance Committee, C. A. C. Weir. Supplies of food, clothing, etc., will be purchased by the City Relief and any citizen wishing to make such contribution can have the same called for by the chairman, Mr. Chamberlain, secretary of the relief committee, Sw.

SEASON'S WORK IS COMPLETED

Machinery of Godson Co. is Stored For Winter

Quietness now prevails at the asphalt plant of the Godson Construction Company which has been located behind the tourist camp, Dundas street, for the past few months and the efforts of the unemployment and eluded the net spread by the police when the latter threw two town merchants with his smart game.

The swindler quickly ascertained by the merchants was that he was a stranger in the city and wore a dark suit with a pin stripe and light grey fedora hat.

The man was a good salesman and well developed with a glib completion. Each street in the city had small change and he always tendered a ten dollar bill when he understood the man changes his hat for a cap occasionally.

Squirrels Making Home in City

In an issue of this paper, recently, reference was made on the prevalence of black and grey squirrels in the city this fall. Almost every street and park in the city has been invaded by these beautiful, frisky furry pets. The woods and they are furnishing no small amount of amusement, interest and pleasure to hundreds of Belleville people.

Two of these little fellows have, either by fortune or foresight, taken up their abode in a box placed in front of Mrs. Elizabeth Payne's home on Bridge street, and have become so tame that they will feed from the hand and are always on one in search of food and, in gratitude, are the pets of their domicile. One is particularly precocious and has little hesitation in interviewing even strangers, if he thinks there is a nut or two to relinquish for his friendly attention.

Food and nuts may be scarce in the woods and may be for the kindred and tribal friends even in the city, but the fortunate pair have evidently chosen their winter quarters well, and are apparently thoroughly a well provisioned and comfortable winter.

ENGINEER

inaula. When a young boy the late Mr. Davidson came to the county of Hastings and eventually located in the Belleville district. At one time he was employed at the old Page mill at Perry Point, now called Rossmore and for many years was in the employ of the late Henry Corby, father of the late Senator Corby, Belleville. Mr. Dan Allen was a stationary and railway engineer and when Belleville had an electric street railway, he was chief engineer at the plant which supplied the railway with power and for many years he was an engineer in the employ of the Grand Trunk railroad. As a corporal with the forty Belleville boys who served in the American Civil war and was at Gettysburg and other engagements. He was also a honorable citizen and on June 27, 1865.

Mrs. Davidson lived a very active industrious and useful life. There were born to them seven sons and regret his passing. To mourn there are left his widow, seven sons and one daughter, Mrs. Harrison by his first wife, who predeceased him seven years ago. The sons are—Thomas Davidson of the Department of the Interior Ottawa, Canada and John Davidson of Milwaukee; William Davidson of Belleville; David Davidson of Detroit; Bertram Davidson of Detroit; Martin Davidson at home and a daughter, Mrs. T. W. Lawrence of Duluth Minn.

The late Mr. Davidson was a member of the United Church.

Deer Licenses are Going on Sale

Despite the so-called depression the sale of deer licenses to local nimrods has, so far, exceeded that of last year. The reason given by Mr. Jas. Thomas, who has been appointed issuer of these permits is that many who are out of work are taking the trail in an effort to secure meat at small cost and incidentally taking the benefits a week or so in the back country that will afford them.

Anglers permits, also, which are necessary only for American tourists, have mounted higher than previous years, and the explanation given for this is interesting. It is stated that many American tourists who came to Canada this year did so for the sole purpose of indulging in that sport; this necessarily resulted in a greater percentage applying for the permit privilege. The fee for non-resident hunters has been set at $41.00, while those who go from this district will escape with the comparatively small sum of $6.00.

SHORT CHANGE ARTIST HERE

Pays Visit to Several Stores and Escapes

Some excitement was occasioned in a local department store on Front street at 8:30 Saturday evening when a member of the staff became suspicious of the actions of a man of his customers, called in the police. It was learned that the short change artist had been making the rounds of the city's business establishments

The man was a good salesman and well developed with a glib completion. He always had small change and he always tendered a ten dollar bill when he understood the man changes his hat for a cap occasionally.

Kiwanis Ladies Night to be Smart Affair

Arrangements have been completed for the inter-city visit of the Kiwanis Club to Belleville Club on Tuesday next. The meeting will be a ladies' night and the function of their visit to the commodious auditorium of St. Michael's Parish Church, Pinnacle street. It will supply the program, an illustrated lecture by Fred Hoge Stocking, managing editor of "Mayfair" magazine and a native son of Picton, who is the speaker and the subject "Interior Decoration" will be special interest to the ladies. The Women's Catholic League will supply the banquet and at the conclusion of the program, dancing will follow, music being supplied by Goyer's Bon Ton orchestra. This is the first ladies' night that has been held in the Quinte area and is to be hoped all the Belleville members will be there with their "better halves" and will be on hand to greet their Picton friends.

DESTRUCTION OF "CASTLE" COMPLETE

The old "Castle" situated in the rear of St. Michael's Church and which is being demolished to make way for a contemplated extension of parking grounds there, is now tumbling into a memory. Workmen for the past few days have been steadily engaged in the demolition of the structure, and when visited today there was little left but a few stones of the foundation. The lumber, sashs and fittings are being salvaged by a local contractor and it is claimed, the structure will be no way affected by the many years it has stood.

CHURCHES TO ASSIST IN RELIEF PLANS

The Ministerial Association of the city held their regular monthly meeting in the Y.M.C.A. parlors Monday morning with Rev Robert Hall, president of the Association, in the chair. Miss Emma Lynch, secretary of the city unemployment relief committee, outlined that organization's plans for the relief of the needy unemployed of the city for the coming winter. The Association was unanimous in endorsing the work of the civic committee and assured Miss Lynch that this matter would be called to the notice of the various congregations and their every effort made to cooperate and aid in co-ordinating the work.

SERVICES AT ST. MICHAEL'S

Parish Church Crowded On Sunday for Special Services

Yesterday the feast of All Saints was celebrated in the Roman Catholic Church. At ten thirty Mass, a choir of children at the front and second forms, of the High School Commercial and Academy sang very sweetly the "Mass of the Angels." High Mass was followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

At seven o'clock a double vesper service was sung for the first time in this parish, Rt. Rev. J. J. Nicholson, V.G., officiated, and the choir sang, first, the "Vespers for the Feast of all Saints." For the second service the church was decorated with lovely autumn flowers and the tabernacle curtain was of gold. At the conclusion of the chanting of the Vespers, the altar was stripped of its ornaments, the the tabernacle curtain was of purple for the purple of mourning and the officiating priest exchanged his cope for purple ones. The choir then sang the "Vespers for the Dead."

At the conclusion of the services Monsignor Nicholson preached an eloquent sermon, explaining the Catholic Doctrine of Prayers for the Departed. He took his text the words found in the Book of Job 19:21 "Have pity upon me. me, O ye my friends: for the hand of the Lord has touched me." He spoke of the awful universality of death. Thrones are crumbling, empires fall, none escape it, riches cannot bribe it nor powerful people is not low]y to escape its notice. Every one must feel at some time that they must soon to all. When a loved one has been called by death, when a familiar voice is silenced and a vacant place speaks of one that will be seen no more, it is contrary to human desire that this ends all the one we have gone and those who are left behind. Loving friends and relatives turn with consolation to the teaching of the Church on the Doctrine of death.

It is the doctrine of the Catholic Church, that as in this world all there are various states of life, so there are three states in the life after death. The condition of one's soul at the time of death determines which of these it is to occupy in the life hereafter. For those who die in the state of mortal sin there is no hope. His hosts of saints in the heaven and there are those who on earth through the Sacrament cleansed their soul of sin and of the eternity punishment due, but as nothing vile can enter the holy presence of Almighty God they must cleanse their soul of every stain of sin before entering purgatory—the state of the Church Suffering. Souls are not perfect when they become pure enough for the Triumphant.

The purgatory a soul can no longer help itself. Its sufferings only small amount can be relieved by that they are not eternal but last only for a time, however painful. But God does not forget them. In the Church established means of making their sufferings less. It has decreed that those on earth may help the souls in purgatory by offering in Purgatory. By prayers and by the offering of the Sacrifice of Masses for the souls of the departed. When the soul is released from its place of purgatory punishment.

The Church appealed to his hearers not to forget the souls in Purgatory, especially their friends. Services of bereavement have been held and last night, for the wound, thoughts of the voices of the departed were more pity on me, have pity on Me," should not forget.

This morning for the feast of All Souls Masses were celebrated for the souls of the departed at seven, eight and nine o'clock. The last was a Solemn High Mass.

MAN TURNING BACK TO GOD

One Sin Left Undestroyed Will Destroy Career

"When a man can go no further he cries back to God. This was the key-note of the sermon delivered by the Rev. W. A. Downer of Toronto at Christ Church Sunday night. "In the Old Testament, and New Testament and today the call and the call tradition has ever presented itself when man was in the direst circumstances," explained the speaker.

For illustration Rev. Mr. Downer quoted Elijah's text against the 850 priests of the god Baal to be found in the 18th chapter of Kings. He also quoted the Prodical Son as another example of God's opportunities to show the dependency of man upon God in times of stress and need.

The Rev. Mr. Downer explained that the leaders of all nations today were practically admitting that a "second must arise" unto God in their hour of need. "It is the need of prayer that helps mankind and brings God's power," said the speaker. He also explained that the message of God destroy men, will build character and a new person will be the outcome when man become a witness of God.

"We must destroy all sin, no matter how small, if we wish to build a character that is worthy of God," explained Mr. Downer. He also told the congregation that sins that are "secret" must be confessed, for our own personal downfall should be destroyed if they would destroy men, and in its infancy was the time to nip such sin.

In closing the Rev. Mr. Downer pointed out that "the way is rough" and the only way to climb is ever advancing as there are too many people standing still in the church today.

al observance. "The pursuance and promotion of peace" will inspire the service. The presence of regiments of soldiers at the temporary cenotaph erected on Parliament Hill will not be dictated by a desire to stimulate military effort, it was explained by Legion officials here today, but rather to illustrate their co-partnership in the sacrifices which their former comrades made in order that peace might be achieved.

Remembrance Day being a statutory holiday all governmental activities will be suspended. In Ottawa most of the larger businesses the banks and industrial plants will be closed.

"Immediately upon the outbreak officials resisted removal this greatly hampering the work of rescuers.

"The buildings at the hospital consist of a main building, originally a reformatory for boys, and two cottages known as "A" and "B". Cottage "A" was erected about 40 years ago, and plans had been completed to overhaul cottage "A" during the immediately and to add substantially to the building.

OUTLAWS OF EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

"There will be stark drama, and tragedy, in it, my friends, Mr. Tichenor."

"I dare say ——. Well, now that I have had my own ideas on the legality of my position confirmed by such eminent water counsel as yourself, it would seem that all I can do is to go back to Edge of Forlorn Valley ruin itself."

"But ——," Tichenor, Gag an protested, "you will take some measures to protect those people before they embark on such a ruinous enterprise?"

Notwithstanding the fact that it would be very bad business for me to do that, I shall do it. It will be a case of love's labor lost, however. The people will not believe me; they are following a false leader and blindly loyal to him."

Well, hardly that, sir," was the legal services to date. Something tells me I shall be retained professionally at a later date."

Returning home, Nate Tichenor was met at the railroad depot in Gold Run by his chauffeur with the car. Passing through Valley Center enroute to Eden Valley he saw some men installing a loading into a vacant store in the Babson Block; above the door a new sign announced the world that presently the Forlorn Valley Citizen would here go to press.

Certainly Babson was losing no time moving into action. Nor was Joe Brainerd as Nate discovered when he paused at the office of the Register, hoping to glean news of interest that might have occurred during his four days' absence. He found Brainerd writing an editorial cordially welcoming his competitor into the field.

"Going to press tomorrow with a two-page issue, Nate," he announced. "Practically all of my local advertising has been withdrawn."

"Why not run the cancelled ads just the same, Joe? If I were you I would decline to let Babson see how badly he has hurt me. He may think his slaves have not obeyed orders and start a fight with me in consequence. If anybody cancels his subscription continue sending him the paper as usual. I'll take care of your deficit. When I'm fight ing a bitter fight it's against my religion to cry out or admit I'm hurt."

Brainerd grinned, for this was the sort of fight he loved to wage, if he could afford it. "I'm running another front-page editorial on the water question, Nate. Forlorn Valley has to have the water and if it cannot get it from the Monarch Valley Power Company it must tap the creek up in the Hazdle. I'm living up to our agreement, boy, and making the fight for my subscribers".

"You'd be a traitor not to."

"What did your lawyer say?"

Nate related in detail his conversation with Gagin. Perhaps, Brainerd suggested, "I'd do well to write a new editorial pointing out to the people the possibility of failure of the plan which, lured by Babson they are about to embark. What do the poor devils know about it? Only what Babson tells them."

"That's a splendid idea, Joe. The people will then have an opportunity to study the matter carefully before attending the mass meeting. Consequently they will be more favorably inclined toward the proposition I shall have to make them at that meeting. . . And when the editorial has been written and set up, pull a proof and hand it over to Babson. It may give him food for reflection."

Within two hours Brainerd sent his devil over to the bank with the proof and a note from Brainerd to the effect that he was running the editorial in his next issue and inviting comment. After reading the editorial Babson passed it into Henry Rookby for the latter's reaction.

"He asks for my comment, Henry Well, I'll oblige him." And Babson wrote in red crayon across the proof: "When Forlorn Valley has its own reservoir filled. you and Tichenor have my permission to jump into it and drown yourselves, and greatly oblige. yours etc., B. Babson."

"Shoot 'em in the foot" Mr. Rookby urged wittily.

When the bank's messenger took the proof and Babson's message back to Joe Brainerd that astute individual sighed and, after the fashion of newspaper men who always save the written expressions of opinion of their enemies, locked it up in his safe.

INSTALMENT XIX

Darby, Nate Tichenor's chauffeur, was enjoying to the fullest his master's visit to Eden Valley. Distinctly a New York product, Darby had heard there was considerable space west of the Hudson River, but he had not been prepared to admit that the country was as wide-open as he had found it.

Darby had, enjoyed the branding, but most of all he had enjoyed the idleness of his job.

Miss Kershaw had been very kind to Darby, too. It was she had sent him down an old, safe saddle horse to ride. She had sent a boy down to town for the gloomy but efficient Joseph but unfortunately only had a stock-saddle with him. and as Joseph had never ridden anything but an English saddle, his conservatism forbade that he should try anything new. He compromised, however, by taking the long walks with the fashion of his kind, and Darby long-jay and hawks and fish-like Darby, he rejoiced because his master required but little services from him.

Before leaving for San Francisco, however, Nate had given Darby on the tax rod posting "No Shooting, Fishing or Trespassing" signs from the gate at the entrance to Eden Valley to the farthest limits of the Kershaw ranch. This task pleased both servants. particularly Darby who had acquired a truly Britannic passion for privacy and the preservation of private shooting and fishing preserves from alien invasion. The collies must up, therefore, Joseph saw his duty plainly before him. With much misgiving, therefore, he climbed into the stock saddle on the horse Lorry Kershaw had sent him and, with a .22 caliber rifle in a scabbard and set forth to apprehend poachers, a poacher being considered by Joseph as absolutely the lowest form of human life.

For two days he amused through the pleasant valley, enjoying the solitude.

The day Tichenor came home from San Francisco Darby seized upon his absence to fish and shoot while Joseph saddled his horse and set forth again on his delightful journeying, his heart still beating high with the hope of finding a poacher. And late in the afternoon, as the shadows were growing long in Eden Valley and Joseph was reminded that he must return home soon and prepare dinner for his master, he had discovered the man he would dine at home that night. He discovered a poacher.

He had ridden into a thick grove of yellow pines when, happening to glance up the side of the ridge that separated Eden Valley from Forlorn Valley, he saw a man descending through the buck-brush and laurel. Through his master's binoculars the excellent Joseph made appraisal and discovered the man carried a rifle.

The man could hardly have found more open going, yet he preferred to stick to the tall brush. nor did he advance confidently as an honest man should. Arrived at last at the foot of the ridge, the fellow found himself a hiding place in a clump of laurel about 30 feet above the road and Joseph, who had overheard him break of some branches to clear his line of view and fire. Then he sat down.

"Something devilish queer about this fellow, what?" Joseph decided. He got off his horse cautiously and slipped from tree to tree until he was within 40 yards of the man. then he sat down behind a clump of manzanita to await developments Through his binoculars he could now make out the man's form; he saw that the fellow's rifle rested in a crotch in a laurel bush.

"He's waiting for somebody," Joseph concluded. "By Jove, a bally assasin. what? The blighter will hear clear watching for a bit, I fancy."

Suddenly, up the valley Joseph caught a faint rumbling. He knew that would be his master's automobile crossing a loosely planked bridge across one of the small laterals streams that flowed down the hillside to Eden Valley Creek. Instantly there was a slight movement in the laurel bush; a little later Nate Tichenor's car bore into view, Joseph saw the hidden man's hand come up and grasp the rifle. saw his head come down to cuddle the stock.—so Joseph, horribly excited but with his right eye clear below him, sighted on the man's head and pulled away. He was rewarded by hearing a grunt; then the bushes parted. the man leaped down into the road and scuttled across it for the haven of the clump of sage plum in which Joseph was hidden. As he passed the bush behind which Joseph knelt concealed, the valet arose up, followed and banged the fellow heartily over the head with his rifle barrel. Then he helped himself to the stranger's rifle and stepped out into the road.

"It's quite all right Mr. Tichenor," he shouted. "Joseph speaking sir. The blighter was out to scuppers you, I fancy, but I've scuppered him. Do come and have a look at the rascal, sir."

Nate drove up alighted and followed Joseph into the pine grove, where he rolled the unconscious man over and looked at him. "That's Pitt River Charley", he announced. "He's a half-breed Indian and years ago he used to be a professional killer. I thought the fool had retired. but somebody must have made it worth his while to get back into harness. Are you quite certain he was gunning for me, Joseph?"

"Absolutely, sir. I've been watching him for an hour, sir. His gun was at his shoulder and he was sighting on you, sir, when I fired at his head sir."

"You're a rotten shot, at that range Joseph. You've put a 22 calibre bullet through his right biceps. However, it sufficed to spoil his plan and stampeded him. so he ran for those trees."

He helped himself to the canteen on Joseph's saddle and dashed some water over Pitt River Charley's dusky face. Then he emptied the fellow's pockets and found two hundred and fifty dollars in crisp new bills. Tichenor grinned at his servant. "It seems I'm worth five hundred dollars dead to somebody, Joseph. It's the custom to cut off the hair and down the remainder upon completion of the job and whoever hired this fellow is a fool, because Pitt River Charley would have worked for a lot less money."

"Good God sir," cried the horrified Joseph.

"Well, you haven't got a filling on your honest British head, Joseph and I'm obliged to you for saving my life." Joseph was horribly embarrassed when Tichenor slapped his back seven times and assured him he was a brick and stout fellow and that he, Tichenor, craved a glimpse of the man who could thereafter pry Joseph loose from his service. "I'll guard his fellow" he continued, "while you take the car, drive up to the Kershaw ranch and, without letting Miss Kershaw know anything about this affair, find Rube Tenney, her superintendent, and tell him I want to see him immediately. He's to come down in the car with you and bring his (TO BE CONTINUED)

NOAH'S FLOOD CALLED LOCAL

Excavators in Ur Indicate Local Flood

Philadelphia, Nov. 2.—Excavations on the banks of the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia show that the Biblical flood of Noah's time was merely a local condition, according to Sir Leonard Woolley, noted archeologist. Many inhabitants of the region escaped by fleeing to the hills, he said.

Dr. Woolley is first director of the joint expedition of the University of Pennsylvania and British museums to Mesopotamia. He lectured at the university and showed motion pictures of the excavations.

Deep in the ground under Ur of the Chaldees, beneath buildings erected by later generations, the scientists found what they regard as proof to the still left by the great flood. They placed the date between 4,000 and 5,000 B.C.

Buildings, cooking utensils and other relics discovered in strata found above and below the silt are of identical patterns, Dr. Woolley said, indicating that persons who fled the floods returned later and resumed their old manner of living.

The very presence of Noah at the scene of the flood is placed in doubt by the discoveries, Dr. Woolley declared. He said there were no Jews in that vicinity when the Euphrates overflowed.

Dr. Woolley expects to return to Mesopotamia within a week.

PUBLISHED BY THE GENERAL UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF COMMITTEE

This Is Your Chance to Help the Jobless!

Men and women out of Jobs do not want charity! They want Jobs! And it is in your power to help give them Jobs. You, who are employed and whose income is not one jot smaller than it was a year ago, can resume Normal Buying,

You have "cut down," shaved your budget. Why? There is no answer. But there is an answer to why you should begin buying normally again. A big one! The Unemployed! By holding back from normal, sensible buying, you are depriving industry of normal production, depriving industry's workers of jobs, depriving yourself in turn, of unusual buying opportunities.

Every jobless person eventually reacts to the disadvantage of every job-holder. The jobless are not consumers; and whatever your trade, business or profession, you rely, in the last analysis, on consumers. For the common good you should resume Normal Buying.

And Don't Forget Give a Man a Job!

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 11.

(Metropolitan Newspap er Feature Service, Inc.)

All through the brilliant desert night they rode swiftly over the waste of sand. At sunrise the caravan was sighted and soon the sheik's lost daughter was restored to him. "All that is mine is yours," he said to Tarzan, urging the ape-man to accept his tribe's hospitality.

Tarzan rode with them that day. It was with real regret that he saw them depart, as he turned back alone for Bou Sander. Under the African moon the call of the jungle came strong upon him. Many familiar sounds fell upon his ears. He heard the distant coughing of Sheeta, the leopard—then the wail of a panther!

Presently a new sound obtruded itself. No human ear other than the ape-man's would have detected it. But to Tarzan it came from the bare feet of a number of human beings. Behind him, coming quickly. He was being stalked! He had long been convinced there were hired assassins on his trail.

Closer came the footsteps. Tarzan halted, faced them, rifle ready. He called aloud in French, asking what they would of him. Their reply was the flash of a long gun, and, with the sound of the shot, Tarzan of the Apes plunged forward upon his face. Rushing from their concealment one of the men put his gun to Tarzan's head to finish him.

Wheat Features Gained 2 cts.

Deferred Deliveries Were 20 Cents Higher Than On October 5th

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 2.—Wheat's future shot upward again today, absorbing profit taking with ease and vigor. Unusual strength at Liverpool, heavy feeding of wheat to Europe and the fact that Russia is dropping out of the export market made the bullish sentiment stamp.

December wheat closed at 71¼ cents, yesterday's close of 61 1-8 and the low of Oct 5—44 5-8. May was changing hands at 66, 19 1-4 cents higher than Saturday's close, and July at 67, and from 2 to 2 1-8 cents above Saturday's final.

GOLD LEAF AS EARDRUM

Talkies and Radio May Profit by Membrane of Gold

Lafayette Ind. Nov. 2.—Talkies and radio may have a new jarnyx in a drum-shaped piece of gold leaf only one-millionth of an inch thick. Details of its development were made public at Purdue University.

This membrane 50 to 100 atomic diameters in thickness is stretched taut like a drum-head over a steel ring larger in diameter than a silver United States dollar.

New methods of stretching made this large gin pick-up possible. They were developed in the physics laboratory of Purdue by C. K. Sloth-over and Arthur Bramley. Gold leaf membranes as thin have been stretched before, it was also learned Purdue but not as large.

Dr. Karl Lark-Horovitz, head of the physics department, said that the big pick-up reproduces the low frequencies that is the deep notes almost without distortion. It can be used for high frequencies as well and for loud speaking.

Further improvements on machines can pull so thin a membrane without tearing. The stretch is done by the movement of atoms when metals expand in the heat and contract in the cold. "Stretching by atomic efficient of expansion," and is used rather than gold three separate stretchings.

Peanut Argument Stirs Circus Fans

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—The unexpected arrival of a letter from a showman-philosopher brought a sudden end to an argument between advocates of the salted peanut and those who prefer their nuts natural state yesterday at the Hotel Commodore where the Circus Fans of America held a luncheon.

The discussion began before the second course. One speaker had declared that the unadorned peanut and the circus were inseparable. Will Rogers, who had been sitting at the shell were pause and that the salted variety had irrefrievably replaced them.

Words shot across the table as the members took sides.

"The peanut is an institution," declared a humorist, who went on to draw its development. "The first peanut was a circus fan. In argument, "I say the peanut. What would the circus do without it?"

It looked for a moment as if the issue might cause a split. At this point a waiter handed a letter to Jacob P. Weinig of the Curtis Publishing Company, president of the association.

The communication from a college player, who was down-hearted because he had been released, generally, was penned on a roll of peanut tent long.. Mr. Weinig read the letter aloud until it ended. From the table, thus ended the argument.

C. J. Atkinson, honorary secretary of the Boy Scout Federation, then took the floor to advance his theories of peanut culture. "There is a common fallacy," he said, "that peanuts are grown underground. The fact is that they grow above it in large peanuts. Here is the largest peanut I have ever seen."

From his pocket he drew a peanut fifteen inches long. Amid cheers the end, poured a quart of peanuts on the table.

Andrew H. Dykes, president of the New York chapter announced that "due to the decided informality of the organization the November meeting will be held on December 2."

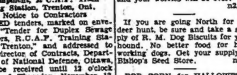
FINE SPECIMENS OF APPLES ON DISPLAY



Some excellent specimens of the famous Northern Spy apple were on exhibit in the business office of The Ontario Intelligencer this Monday. They were grown on the farm of Mr. Fred Goodman at South Bay, Prince Edward county and were brought to The Ontario Intelligencer office by Mr. Goodman's brother-ed. Mr. Clarence Goodman of Thurlow. In coloring and formation the apples are perfect and in size they are remarkable measuring in circumference twelve and one quarter inches and weighing over three, one half inches. Mr. Goodman has two hundred barrels of this popular fruit and many of them are larger than the specimens which were kindly presented to The Ontario Intelligencer. The apple growers of Prince Edward county are putting their fruit up in attractive form for marketing through the Co-Operative Fruit Growers Association of Picton. Machines are used which size the apples according to size and polish them at the same time, making them most desirable in appearance Some apples are packed in barrels and a very large quantity are put up in boxes and half bushel boxes, carefully and neatly wrapped for shipping purposes. The marketing in these packages is a great improvement over the old way and appeals most favorably to dealers and consumers.

Weddings

DUFFIELD—FOLWELL

Christ Church, beautifully decorated with mauve, yellow and white chrysanthemums and ferns, was the scene of a very pretty wedding Saturday afternoon, when Ella Amy only daughter of Mrs. Folwell 61 Grier street, and the late E. J. Folwell, became the bride of Mr. Archibald Sydney Duffield, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Duffield of Belmont. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. Wright of Trenton.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her brother, Mr. Harry Folwell, of Belleville, the strains of Mendelsohn's wedding march played by Miss Eva La Vole, wore a lovely gown of ivory satin and French lace. The lace formed a yoke and puff sleeves and was inserted in panels on the full skirt. With this was worn a filmy wedding veil of sprabell tulle in cap effect, caught on either side with orange blossoms. The bride carried a shower bouquet of Butterfly roses and lilies of the valley and wore the gift of the groom, a necklace of pearls.

Miss Edith Duffield of Samia, sister of the groom, was bride's honour and Miss Marion Murphy, who with Mr. Archibald, were gowned alike in picturesque frocks of corded taffeta with hats of trans parent velvet, while Duffield's gown was in blush pink shade and was fashioned on flowing lines with puff sleeves peplum' effect and panels of ring frills on the skirt. Her hat turning up sharply in front, was of lettuce green, as were her lace mitts and shoes. Miss Murphy's costume was in the green shade with hat, mitts and shoes of blue. Both girls carried old fashioned bouquets of Butterfly roses and lilies of the valley and wore the gift of the groom, necklets of crystals, and silver.

Mr. W. C. Folwell, the bride's brother, was groomsman and one of the ushers were Mr. Charles Folwell, the bride's cousin, and during the signing of the register Mrs. Maurice LaVole sang very sweetly "Because."

After the ceremony a reception was held at the bride's home, Mrs. Folwell, mother of the bride, in a handsome gown of wood brown velvet and lace. Mrs. Duffield, the groom's mother wearing black lace with hat to match and Mrs. Percy Folwell, wearing beige and brown chiffon, received the guests with the bridal couple. The rooms were charmingly decorated with mauve and yellow 'mums, roses being used on the bride's table. Those who assisted in the serving were Miss Irene Hallam, Miss Kitty Betty Lewis of Belleville, Miss Anne Forrest and Mr. Eva Turney.

The groom's gift to the groomsman and ushers were monogrammed military brushes.

Later, Mr. and Mrs. Duffield left on a wedding trip to New York and Atlantic City the bride travelling in a smart suit of carouh brown wool tweeds with beige wool crepe, and matching hat and accessories. On their return they will reside in Belleville.

Most Popular Yellow Stone, the Topaz, Emphasizes November's Friendship Ability

By E. D'ORSAY

THE word topaz comes from "topazios," meaning "to seek," the name of the island in the Red Sea where it was found hundreds of years ago, was difficult to locate.

Perhaps this association may have something to do with the present difficulty that those who have this birthstone may encounter. For, if you were born in November, under the astrological sign of Sagittarius, you will probably find that you cannot determine upon a fixed objective. You may not be able to definitely decide what you want from life. If 1931 has found you vacillating and undecided as to your future and energy, do not worry, for perhaps you have but a new path. Make up your mind to something and then put forth your natural self-confidence and self-reliance and help you attain it.

Your chief characteristics are integrity and feeling, with a prophetic and intuitive nature. You are generous and sensitive, you are a lover of order, and under favorable circumstances arise beyond your control, do not let these traits of distinction you. Make another effort and you will find that your barriers were but unnecessary incentives to carry on.

If you are a lover of the outdoors, as your horoscope indicates, you should make a hobby of some sport, particularly riding. Do not let your gambling spirit carry you away to excesses. Practice moderation in all things, trying to do too many things at once may take the success of one.

Your birthstone is the most popular yellow stone in the gem world. Contrary to the general idea, not all yellow stones is topaz—nor all topaz, yellow. Topaz is usually colorless or very pale in tint, with only yellow hues varying in degree. The true topaz takes an excellent and dazzling polish.

Topaz is comparatively inexpensive, for both small and large pieces of jewelry. It is especially unusual in that, unlike other stones, it can be obtained in almost any desirable size.

The topaz is said to inspire friendship; your natural ability to make friends and keep them, makes you doubly fortunate in this respect. Those born in your own month, and those under the sign of Leo (July—ruby) should be very congenial to you.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Pollett

One way to climb the beauty heights is the strenuous one of arms, legs, and body exercise. Animals and babies do it, but grown-ups usually have to learn it. It is a natural habit that is forgotten as birthdays pile up. Five minutes of stretching and deep breathing before getting up in the morning and again before going to sleep will stimulate circulation, help to keep the glands out of the nervous system, be of general benefit to health and appearance.

The ideal complexion is of pink-in-ivory color, that lovely tone of the delicate tea rose. The proper shade of rouge for skin of this description is a blend of pink and yellow, but it should never be orange. It is possible now to have complexion powder mixed to order. It is done in many beauty shops and in the cosmetic departments of some stores. The fluffy and lightly applied they are quite natural and clear than the natural coloring.

High heels are responsible for weak ankles, as well as many another beauty ill. Walking straight on the ankles and shoes are properly fitted. Sitting along on the edge of a chair isn't resting; it's just getting there. A good exercise for impaired ankles is to sit down and cross the legs, send the upper foot around in a circle first in one direction, then in the other. Follow with massage first with one hand, like a cigarette lighter. Reverse position and are putting their minds on the exteriors of lipsticks and powder, making them beautiful and decorative and yes, oh, yes! They are expensive. Beautiful precious cuts is their fragile hearts and wings Built for a gentler universe.

Every woman should respect her hair and take care of it, never bind it with a too tight shoe. The fact of prosperous largely depends upon the pressure of the ball of the foot and the leg pressure against the ground as the body advances.

A large scale vaccum cleaner system was recently placed in a Johannesburg diamond mine for removal of dust in order to reduce the risk from explosions.

Collegiate Grid Teams Romp Through Schedules Without Losing Game to Opposition

PLAYERS HURT

Donahue Fractures Arm While Local Players Are Bruised

Romping through their group with only having their goal line crossed this season, the B. C. I. juniors won the final game of their group schedule by the score of 11 to 0 over their Napanee rivals at the Albert College grounds Saturday morning. Now Belleville Collegiate juniors are to be congratulated on the wonderful record that they have set up this season. Playing in the strongest group division, Napanee, Albert College and Kemmo all fell before the local team by a large margin. The junior city group schedule was finished off on Saturday and we said before that the local team would be a strong contender for the group championship and they certainly proved that they have set up this season. Playing in the strongest group division, Napanee, Albert College and Kemmo all fell before the local team by a large margin. The junior city group schedule was finished off on Saturday and we said before that the local team would be a strong contender for the group championship and they certainly proved that they have set up this season.

Saturday morning's game was played in the mud and while the play was cramped from the battle literally covered in mud it was the best of their heads to the soles of their feet. In the first quarter of the play Jim Fotwell ran around the end of the line for a nice run which led to a fumble which resulted in a touch-down for the locals, which was not converted. Shortly after this he kicked the pig skin to the dead-line for another point. The second quarter was featured by the mud-field as the players could not see and could not hear a sound that prevailed. Just previous to the quarter ending Ralph Ingalls broke loose and scored another touch-down for the locals which was converted. At the quarter time whistle the score stood, Belleville 12, Napanee 0.

The second quarter showed a little more looking to the players as at least they could not make much headway in the heavy mud. In the third the locals extended run scored a touch for the locals and when the ball was finally pushed the ball and ran through the mud eighty yards for another touch-down. The players were trying serial attacks when the half time whistle blew and the score then stood, Belleville 32, Napanee 0.

The locals started the second half off by trying forward passing which resulted in a run of yards for the locals. In the slippery going B. C. I. fumbled the ball on the first down Napanee's ball. Napanee then kicked a kick and Loughlin picking up the loose ball raced over the line, Napanee's goal for a touch-down. The fine work of the Belleville line in breaking up the "griddiers" from breaking into the scoring column this period. Cole and White repeatedly tore through their opponent's line and were often called back for a loss. The quarter ended with the score 38 to 0 in favor of Napanee. The final quarter opened with continued forward passing by the locals. Ingalls, the perfect forward pass to Schreiber who ran across the goal line for a touch, which was converted making the score 45 to 0 in favor of the locals. This was the final scoring of the game and the final minute saw the locals and the Napanee team were threatening.

Fotwell out-kicked Garrett from the beginning of the game until the final whistle blew. Fotwell's punting was one of the features of the game The B. C. I. boys have a right to be proud of and they are now proud possessors of the trophy donated by the officers of the 15th Battalion.

The line-ups were:

Napanee—Garrett, flying wing; Embury, quarter; Garrett, Roe and Hughes, halves; Hughes, Hall, Searles and Guthrie, insides; White and Tripp, outsides; Stevens, Hall, Reid, outsides.

Belleville — Countryman, flying wing; Andrews, quarter; Fotwell, Loughlin and Ingalls, halves; Hallman, White and Cole, insides; Hillman and McKinney, middles; Schreiber and McKinney, middles; Wallbridge, Bradford, Graham, Empson and Hayes.

Officials—Shiels and Webster.

Senior Game

In the senior game scheduled for the afternoon between B. C. I. and Napanee seniors, the field was not in much better condition than it was in the morning. The game was turned out to be an aerial battle with Reynolds one-hundred with Robinson and Garrett. Good football could not be played on a field in the condition that prevailed on Saturday and many a touch-down was made, that otherwise would perhaps have turned the tide of battle. The local seniors out-played the Napanee "griddiers" from the beginning to the finish of which the score bears was never in doubt. Like their junior brothers the B. C. I. seniors went through their group schedule without suffering a single defeat although in some of the games they were forced to the limit before they managed to squeeze out a win.

Breaks Are In Play.

Shortly after Belleville kicked off Donahue, Napanee's star middle wing player, was forced out of the game with a fractured arm, just below the elbow. This casualty did not help the moral of the Napanee team any. Directly after the play Reynolds made a nice fifty yard kick and Jack Graves pounced on the ball earlier behind the line for the first point of the game. On a close kick Jack Marsaka fell on a loose ball for a gain of thirty yards for the locals. At this time both teams saw the folly of trying to carry a ball in the prevailing mud and the aerial attack was on. After exchanging kicks the locals and Phillips through the centre of the line for another point making the score 7 to 0 for the locals. Oliver, Napanee's left half made back on the play and scored a touch-down for the locals making the score 11 to 0 for B. C. I. This was the final scoring of the game and after another field goal the final whistle blew.

On the day's play the locals not only out-generalled their rivals but they completely out-played and out-fought them. The B. C. I. line was a little too good and too heavy for the visitors and Reynolds out-kicked both of his rivals each time they tried an aerial attack. Coach Les Shiels is to be congratulated on piloting both the B. C. I. junior and seniors to their respective group titles. The line-ups for the senior game were:

Napanee—Moore, flying wing; Oliver, Shook and Robinson, halves; Davie, quarter; Thompson, snap; Richardson and Mack, insides; Stewart and Donahue, middles; Mallett and Switzer, outsides; subs, Reid Garrett, MacKenzie, G. Guthrie and R. Guthrie.

Belleville — Hilten, flying wing; Graves, Reynolds and Philips, halves; Ostrom, quarter; Bell, snap; Rogers and Morgan, insides; Wesse and Rigby, insides; Marsaka and Scott, outsides; subs, Scopie, Hall, Miller, Flagler, Dolan and Sergeant.

Referee—Countryman, umpire, H. Webster; head-linesman, J. Grimmon.

VOTES FOR SHORE GAS FRANCHISE

Oshawa, Nov. 2—A 35 year franchise to supply and distribute gas in the township of East Whitby was granted the Ontario Shore Gas Company when the electors of that township carried a by-law granting the company an exclusive monopoly. The vote was very light, but was so one-sided as to be practically unanimous. The company now has gas franchises in the cities of Oshawa and Belleville, the towns of Whitby, Bowmanville and Trenton, and the townships of Whitby, East Whitby, Darlington and Sidney.

Wheelers Painted Town After Win

Jubilation of Victory Was Too Much For Porters on Train

What a game and what a time afterwards. The Montreal Winged Wheelers, who practically clinched the Interprovincial Union by defeating the terrible Tigers right in their own backyard with the Hamilton mountain on Saturday for the first time in years, went hay wire after the game and painted Hamilton as it has never been painted before. A number made the journey by automobile to the ambitious city and joined in the jollification. The team also took the by train and early Sunday morning they passed through the city and the Pullman was literally occupied looked like the wreck of the Hesperus. The team and supporters simply wrecked the place and made the lives of the train porters in charge of the car like the life of Riley. So intent were the members of the car to make the whoopee, that the porters hid from the mob and at one time a search party was called out fearing they had jumped off the train and left the team to their own fate.

The trouble broke out between Port Hope and Cobourg and the porters fearing their safety hid in a small room of the car away from prying eyes. The railway police searched the car on Cobourg and found the window broken and the worst was feared. Leaving Cobourg the police went to the station and

RADIUM VALUE FACTS NEEDED

Caution Advised in Estimating its Benefit in Disease

London.—"The great need at the present time is reliable information with regard to the value of radium as a method of treatment when practised by those who have the necessary knowledge to use it properly," states the second annual report of the Radium Commission. "In its first report the Commission emphasized the importance of caution in estimating the value of radium in the treatment of malignant disease, and the danger of creating hopes the realisation of which in the present state of knowledge, can hardly be anticipated. The commission now states that its present opinion may fairly be summarized as one of hopeful expectancy.

Danger of Generalizing

"It realizes the excellent results which radium therapy often sets in certain cases of malignant disease affecting certain regions of the body—in particular the uterus, the oesophagus, the mouth and the skin. Moreover, even in those cases in which complete recovery cannot be reasonably expected the amount of pain and distress which may be alleviated by the use of radium makes the treatment well worth while. On the other hand, cancer affecting other organs does not react to radium therapy to correspond. ingly happy results and the Commission is anxious that the public be fully intended to emphasize the danger of generalizing from successes in a few areas of the body to successes in every part of the body.

"Time, and a sufficient volume of accurate and uniform records are essential to the solution of the problem and a period of five years at least from the inception of the national scheme would be necessary before any confident verdict could be given.

Trial of "Pooch"

Referring to the four-gramme "bomb" of radium acquired by the National Radium Trust and which wards handed over to the King Edward's Hospital Fund, the report says that it was allocated to Westminster Hospital, with the stipulation that its use should be strictly limited in scope, and that preference should be given to cases in the "most disease in three regions only—heart, stomach, and prostate.

The result of a year's trial convinces the Commission that this form of radium therapy, under careful conditions of knowledge, cannot be recommended for treatment of cancer in these regions. Nor were any better results obtained in the few cases of selected cancer of other organs in which this method was tried. It was, therefore, felt by the Commission that the continued use of the bomb in its present form was not only uneconomic but unwarranted. The subject of surface therapy by means of radium bombs in one which is only very partially explored, and the Commission in conjunction with King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, is at present engaged in considering what the policy for the future should be.

"Alexander Hamilton" the Warner Bros. drama starring George Arliss which comes to the Belle Wednesday for two days, does not dwell on the brilliant statesmanship of the financial genius of the first Secretary of the Treasury but on the common humanity which made him the dupe, temporarily, of one of the cleverest adventuresses of all time—Mary Reynolds.

Indirectly this fascinating woman influenced the brilliant leader who at the time was hopelessly unsuitable for the future of the republic. Among great problems of the time was the choice of a site for the national capital, the establishment of national credit and the question of governmental assumption of revolutionary war debts.

To clear his name from false charges of dishonesty, Hamilton frankly laid bare his part in the Reynolds affair, leaving information to men whom he knew were of like passions with himself. Some of the most dramatic scenes of the absorbing play—which gives Mr. Arliss his most superb role.

Those featured in support are Doris Kenyon, Dudley Digges, Alan Mowbray, Rolfe Harolde, June Colyer, Charles Middleton, Morgan Wallace, Gwendolin Logan, John T. Murray, Charles Lane, Helen Lackaye, Evelyn Hall, Russell Simpson, and Gilbert Emery.

PLENTY ACTION FEATURES DRAMATIC "HUSH MONEY"

Bennet and Albright Featured

Admirers of the beautiful Joan Bennett and Hardie Albright are gratified over the new Joan that Hollywood has developed—a girl who proves in "Hush Money" now at the Belle Thursday, that she can do other things beside radiate beauty from the screen. As Janet Gordon in the film, Miss Bennett has her first really emotional role.

The early sequences of the screen play find her a young and beautiful girl, driven by poverty to accept the patronage of a presumably kind old gentleman. When, after cultured and wealthy man, Miss Bennett learns that Dan Gordon is merely a racketeer, a wolf, in sheep's clothing, she is forced against her will to become one of his gang, even in pose as his wife.

Eventually she and the rest of the gang fall foul of the police and are given prison terms. On her release from prison she determines to go straight and is helped in that determination by a big hardboiled but soft-hearted detective who has taken a friendly interest in her.

She and Albright receive both go through, but not without a very bitter struggle, ending with a murder. Hardie Albright is co-featured with Miss Bennett, playing the role of her husband, and the supporting cast includes C. Henry Gordon, Douglass Cosgrove, Myrna Loy and George Raft.

A funny Boy Friend Comedy entitled, "Hollywood Loves Papa", another of those novel and popular "Screen Souvenirs" short offerings, and the popular Fox News, have been arranged for exhibition on the same program.

At The Capitol

"MEN OF THE SKY"
TONIGHT AT THE CAPITOL

The time of "Men of the Sky" is that ominous period preceding the World War. The scenes are laid in pleasure-loving Baden-Baden, in Paris, Berlin, Military Headquarters and in the plane-darkened skies, for the hero of the story Jack Arnes an American serving as a spy for the Allies, wears the uniform of the enemy.

The earlier sequences portray a tennis match in Baden-Baden where Ames is engaged in a tennis match with his close friends, the Prussian officer, Eric von Cobourg. Watching the game is Madelaine, daughter of a French member of the Intelligence Bureau, and the fiancee of the American.

Friends of the morning are foes at night, for war is declared, Madelaine, by her father's orders must act as a spy and go with Eric who also loves her to his German home to gather information. Jack also becomes a spy. Their secret meeting explains the long silence of Madelaine. Jack plunges into the danger of discovery by the Germans. Many exciting incidents over the kaleidoscopic world of conflict—lead the two to the final parting of ways where personal love must be cast aside for the love of country.

Ralph Forbes and Jack Whiting play the ill-fated and glamorous lovers, while Bramwell Fletcher is Murray Kinnell as Eric Von Cobourg. Other difficult roles are eloquently portrayed by John Halliday, Frank McHugh, Edward Maxwell Otis Harlan, Lotti Loder, Armand Kalis and Mirielle. Alfred E. Green directed with masterly understanding.

"Men of the Sky" is an intensely dramatic portrayal of a phase of the war of which little has been revealed. The photography is worthy of the dignity and beauty of the theme. Don't miss "Men of the Sky."

An episode of Adventures in Africa, a Rodeo treat and the Pathe news completes the program. Showings for the last time to-night at the Capitol.

"SMART WOMAN" WITH AMES HORTON, AND ASTOR NEXT AT THE CAPITOL TUESDAY

Packed with side-splitting comedy fast-moving action-drama, domestic philosophy and colorful settings—and interpreted by a cast of unusually clever players, Radio Pictures' "Smart Woman" which opens Tuesday at the Capitol Theatre for 3 days.

Adapted from Myron C. Fagan's stage hit, "Henry's Private Affair," the plot revolves about the domestic troubles of an over-solicitous wife who returns from abroad to find her husband in the clutches of a gold-digging daughter, aided and abetted by an avaricious mother.

Ames Horton is the husband.

When the wife invites the female love pirates and her own boy friend to spend a week-end at her home things happen which are uproarious in every sense and among the most amusing situations ever screened.

Few pictures can boast of such a cast of players—Sally Astor as the wife, Roger Ames as her husband, Noel Francis the gold-digger, Gladys Cale, her husband-hunting mamma, and Edward Everett Horton, a hypochondriac whose facetious comments and antics add to the genuine enjoyment of the film.

Others in the cast include Ruth Weston, John Halliday, Harvey Clark, Nora Cecil and Lillian Harmer. Leads Play Brilliantly.

The roles of husband and wife are particularly suited to the talents and personalities of Mary Astor and Roger Ames, who rapidly are becoming one of Hollywood's most popular screen teams.

Edward Everett Horton's work is reminiscent of his stage character in "The Nervous Wreck". In "Smart Woman" he outdoes himself one of the screen's most competent comedians.

"Smart Woman" is without doubt an excellent photoplay, ample fare for an evening's enjoyment at the Capitol Theatre. "Smart" will be included in the program.

Speaker Reelected on Opening of New House Today

PREMIER WITH KING

Official Opening of New Parliament Next Tuesday

London, Nov. 3 (AP)—The new House of Commons, packed with an overwhelming majority for Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald's National government, met for its first session this afternoon.

It was a routine meeting for the election of a Speaker and other preliminary business including the swearing in of new members. The King will open parliament formally next Tuesday.

London, Nov. 3 (AP)—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald had luncheon today at Buckingham Palace with the King and Queen and it was assumed that he submitted to His Majesty a list of the new cabinet.

London, Nov. 3 (AP)— The Rt. Hon. Edward Algernon Fitzroy today was re-elected Speaker of the House of Commons after being nominated for the office by Sir George Courthope, Conservative member who has sat in Parliament a quarter of a century and seconded by Will Thorne, veteran Labor member.

The new House, with an overwhelming majority for Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald's National government, met for its first time this afternoon to go through that formality and a few other items of routine business. The King will officiate at the state opening of parliament next Tuesday.

Soon after the House assembled the bewigged clerk rose and pointed a finger at Sir George Courthope, who took up the cue and nominated Mr. Fitzroy as speaker. The latter pointed at Will Thorne, who seconded the nomination.

IS RE-ELECTED

Captain the Hon. Edward Fitzroy, Speaker of the British House of Commons since Hon. J. H. Whitley retired in 1928, was re-elected when the House met to-day to elect a Speaker. Captain Fitzroy is a Conservative.

Washington, D.C., Nov. 3 (AP)—Riding to the sway of balloting today in five Congressional districts in the thirteen-year-old domination of the House of Republicans.

From the results of these and other elections in nine of the United States, observers will seek to read political foreshadowings of events during the 1932 presidential campaign.

Of the five special elections called to fill vacancies in the House the outcome is unusually important. Each district is considered doubtful. They are first Ohio and the eighth Michigan.

GANDHI AT DOWNING ST.

Discusses Indian Problems With Premier Ramsay MacDonald

London, Nov. 3 (AP)—Mahatma Gandhi paid his first visit to No. 10 Downing Street today and talked with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald during an hour at the problems of the Indian round table conference.

He told the Prime Minister he regretted his failure to effect a settlement of the Anglo-Moslem electoral problem and his conversation followed what was termed by a note of despair.

A cold, bleak wind whistled through the streets and Gandhi's odd appearance in a loin cloth, homespun khaki sandals and heavy legs attracted much attention.

For the first time since he came to London he posed voluntarily for photographers. "I hate photographers," he said, "but now I am your prisoner and can't escape. He smiled as he sat in the car, with one arm of a picture men close behind him at the Prime Ministe's doorstep.

Cold Meal as Man is Fired

HAGERSTOWN, Md., Nov. 2.—Hagerstown had cold steak Saturday as the result of a spite of pique on the part of a discharged employee of the City Gas Company.

H. F. Gift, the cause of it all, was in the Hagerstown jail. Gift, employed by the Gas Company for 22 years was discharged recently. Last night he walked into the company's main office, cut off the master valve, to the gas supply to 7,000 homes.

Company officials were afraid to turn the gas on again because of the possibility that many jets throughout the city were open. All employees were ordered for a house to house canvass to see that all jets were closed.

POLISH TENOR IS ACCLAIMED

Fifteen Curtain Calls Demanded By Audience

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 3.—Jerzy Bergel, Polish tenor, was acclaimed alike by critics and the brilliant audience which attended his debut in this country last night in Puccini's "La Boheme."

It was the opening of the tenth season of the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

On one side of the footlights was the setting of a modernistic interpretation of a Paris garret, which included not only Kingston, Mario Cavaradossi, but Claudia Muzio as Tosca and Vanni Marcoux as Scarpia.

On the other was a crowded house of music lovers. The gold coast, with a flash of jewels and an array of evening clothes, filled the boxes. The Ghetto climbed to the balcony. But in the outer halls they rubbed elbows in democracy.

Klaiber was compelled by the audience to take fifteen curtain calls. It was the greatest ovation to that given Amelita Galli Curci here fifteen years ago.

The curtain fell on the tenth performance warmly.

Hounds are Scarce, Hunters Search for Collies for Chase

Inquiry Fails Even to Get Animal at Dog "Keep"

HOUND SLUMP

"A hunting we will go—A hunting we will go" this has been the invention of both the young and many sportsmen in Belleville and surrounding district for several weeks past. Shooting Today" have been re-cleaned, burnished and polished and everything got in readiness for the deer shooting season which opens on Nov. 5. Guns and all things necessary for the hunting camp, they have in abundance, but dogs—ah, there's the rub. Hounds, which can be depended on to scare up the deer and stay by the quarry until "the kill"—are scarce. Hunters, who have kept their dogs are considering parting with the breed. Many dogs, it is said, were destroyed last year, as it was understood that the using of them in the chase for deer would not be permitted this season. Too late many sportsmen have learned that the use of dogs is quite legitimate and now they wish that they had kept their faithful hounds. Some sportsmen have gone for the shortage of deer hunting dogs is that the breeding of them has fallen off.

Thomas Thorne, who is in charge of the city "dog pound" for cats and stray dogs, says that many females have come to the pound looking for Collis dogs to use in deer hunting. They tell him that as they cannot get hounds, collies are taken as a substitute. The only breed of dogs, which will answer the purpose. Unfortunately Mr. Thorne has unable to supply them.

Experienced deer hunters say that the collie will be useful in "driving up" the deer—that is in chasing the game from swamps and out into the open, where the hunters are stationed to receive them. This is the method by which deer have been hunted over and there is a creeping fear which the deer may be chased. The nose of the collie, however, is not keen for it such as to pick up and carry the scent through thickly wooded country.

Early Rise

Chicago, Ills., Nov. 3—Grains rose early today after an irregular start with trading on a fair scale. Unexpected reports of lack of wheat offerings either from Russia or other countries, new advances were in the face of reiterated official denials of assertions that Russia had withdrawn from the world market as a seller. Opening at 3-4c to 1 1-4c up, wheat rose quickly 1 cent a bushel. Corn started 1-4-1-2c higher and altered held near the initial limits.

Exports to Continue

Moscow, Nov. 3 (AP)—Increasing domestic demand may reduce Russia's wheat exports to some extent, but it was authoritatively declared today that the Soviet Union will discontinue exports this year and that no has been reported abroad.

An official in a position to know said that the increased demand combined with reduction of the Spring crop by drought undoubtedly will cut the exportable total, but he declared that exports will not be stopped by any means.

Supporting this view was a speech by Vyacheslaff Molotoff, president of the Council of Peoples' Commissars

Dentist Ready To Go Farming

SPOKANE, Washington, Nov. 3—Since Dr. George E. Hurd announced he would accept farm produce in lieu of cash for extracting molars and filling cavities, he has hopes of making a model farm of a small tract he owns.

This is how the count stood today—Forty-five sacks of potatoes; one hundred and fifteen bushels of wheat; nine cords of wood; five tons of coal; twenty-six chickens; sixteen geese; two calves.

He needs, he said, a few horses to tend the farm, a few good cattle and a dog.

Estranged Wife of Arnold Bennett Writes Biography

Praises Famous Novelist and Condemns Self

OBEYED LAWYERS

London, Nov. 3 (By Thomas T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent).—A biography of the late Arnold Bennett, noted British author, by his estranged wife, Marguerite, made its appearance in Great Britain today.

Mrs. Bennett, who is a French, has only the highest praise for her husband, but she declares he was overstanding with my husband," she writes, "and I obeyed like an ignorant fool, and was never allowed to resist. I have always felt, and still claim, that our separation was a grievous mistake."

His Kindness

Mrs. Bennett tells many stories of her husband's kindness and generosity not only to herself, but to others for whom he was not even related. She describes one incident in which Bennett discovered her interest in calligraphy. He wrote to a friend in Paris, who sent her nearly 700 pages, in block characters and presented her with the manuscript.

In reference to Bennett's friendship with Lord Beaverbrook, Canadian-born peer and empire crusader, Mrs. Bennett declares they are both conquerors, extremely intelligent, and extraordinarily human ways Bennett once said he would not be at all surprise if Lord Beaverbrook should, some day become Prime Minister.

Pal Meets Long Lost Pal over Bowl of Soup

"Hello, Bill, how are chances for a bowl of soup?

The "Bill" thus addressed is William Richardson, the chief dispenser of soup in the kitchen at the city police station and he was greatly surprised to behold in the young man standing before him, a chap who came to Canada with him seven years ago from England. Bill was delighted to see his old friend and he filled him to the "full" with good, hot, nourishing soup—carrying on a lively conversation at the time. Bill learned from his friend that he remained in this country for one year after their arrival, working in and around Trenton—and then returned to Eng- land and has been in the home land for the past five years. Times were not good there—not nearly so good as they were when he left Canada, so back he came and landed in Toronto a couple months ago. He failed to find work in the Treston district and is now on his way to Montreal and Ottawa in the hope of getting a job.

Bill's stricken, he has remained in the country of his adoption—sometimes the prospects and outlook times be did not. Just now they are no so good, but Bill has a job, which supplies food and shelter—he says he is well satisfied and he says that good times will come again and that he will yet "make a good in the fine country."

OBSTRUCTION CAUSES WRECK

Car Hits Scraper Placed on Highway as Frank

A Hallowe'en prank at Tweed on Saturday night might have been the cause of a serious accident but to date no one has been apprehended in the matter but the police are still investigating. Those responsible pulled a township road scraper to the centre of the road, left the same there and some time afterwards, a car driven by John Courneyea with his brother Lee, an invalid,struck the scraper head-on and after the car turned over at least twice, it rolled down the river bank into the river, pinning the invalided brother in the wreckage. The driver of the car was able to extricate himself but the invalided brother had to stay in the water for at least fifteen minutes, until a wrecker was brought from the village of Tweed so that the car could be lifted and the man released. Fortunately the water in the river was not deep or Lee Courneyea would have been drowned. The accident has stirred up considerable comment in the village and every effort is being made to find out, who was responsible for the placing of the obstruction on the highway. The accident occurred about one mile north of the village and the Courneyea brothers were proceeding northerly at the time.

A well attended meeting of the Y's Men's Club was held last night when a talk by Mr. J. O. Herity on his recent trip to the mine near Wilberforce, in North Hastings, where radium, active minerals have been discovered and are being developed.

Mr. Herity first explained to the members the part that scientists of the later part of the last century played in the discovery of these elements, with which radium itself is found. He told how each element of which the mine is composed, was known to science by a number and scientific property described long before it had been actually located.

Samples of the ores being mined to the north of us, proved of interest to the members of the Club. Herity was kept busy answering questions after his address. Visitors to the Club were expressed by George Manley. Presided over by Blackmore was in the chair, Earl Boyd, song leader and Newt Wilbur, sergeant-at-arms.

RASPBERRIES IN NOVEMBER

Violets Also Bloom in Eleventh Month of Year

Raspberries and violets in November—true they may not be in their usual season but they are there and they have appeared out of season and at this late date is extraordinary and worthy of note. In the garden of Mr. W. H. Luffman, prominent Belleville contractor and builder, 213 Dundas street and in the garden of Mr. A. W. Thomas, Superintendent of the Belleville cemetery, raspberries have appeared thickly clustered on several bushes. Some of the berries are quite ripe, while others are just on the verge of maturity.

GIRL ADMITS SUICIDE NOTE

Declares She and Husband of Dead Woman Quarrelled

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 3.—A 16-year-old domestic confessed yesterday she had written the suicide note found by the body of her mistress and that she and the woman's husband quarrelled often.

Largely on the strength of the story told by the girl, Betty Zimmerman's assistant prosecutor, Thomas Brustar said a warrant would be asked tomorrow charging Lonnie Jenkins, former Detroit street railway conductor, with the murder of his wife on October 15th.

The body was found next to death two weeks ago. A note near the body declared it was a suicide. The death was accepted as such for a few days, then police secured information leading to the arrest, last week in Racine, Wis., on suspicion of murder.

Hallowe'en Aftermaths

The riddle of the missing "Beer Waroboard," (sorry, we mean the sign is lettered) sign has been solved. Turn from Advertising on the side of the warehouse wall by prowling hobgoblins who invaded this district Saturday night. It was borne aloft and carried by willing fairies in the scene of the final resting place, which just happened to be the front steps of the Belleville Collegiate Institute, and where it has been reposing quietly, oh, very quietly, ever since.

Which One?

Tales still exist of misplaced furniture, of chairs in trees and kitchen being thrown on nearby telephone poles, but the latest example of Hallowe'enish pranks and high and humour concerns the beer warehouse sign which was vigorously and forcefully removed from the side of that building, transported to, and accomplished in the front yard of the Belleville Collegiate Institute, where it still remains (up to last night) to the possible detriment of advanced culture and higher learning on some of the more imaginative attendants.

The first accident reported by Chief Hall happened on Dundas street, in Trenton, when a car driven by Robert Hall, Trenton, skidded and struck a car driven by Arthur Lavery of Michigan. BLUENOSE AT CAREER'S END

What Will Become of Ten-Year-Old Racer?

Lunenburg, N. S.—Resting on her laurels of many years' standing which she has retained the international fishermen's trophy and supremacy of the North Atlantic fishing fleet, the schooner Bluenose lies at anchor in Lunenburg Harbor. Co. from her triumph over Gertrude L. Thebaud, pride of Gloucester, she is still much in the limelight but already there is much concern in regard to what will become of the stately queen of the fleets.

The life of a Lunenburg salt banker, built of native wood is usually ten years, after which it is abandoned by fishermen and sold for coastal trade. Because of her racing ability, Bluenose has been given better care than most of her companions and her life has been prolonged. Time is getting in its work, however, and deterioration will come a fact if she lies another year in Lunenburg Harbor. Like many others, she did not go to the banks this year on account of the depressed condition of the fish markets.

If she goes fishing or freighting there is the risk of her hull being gored up on some inland reefs or being buried on the Sable Island sand-bars, "the grave-yard of the Atlantic." Should she be permanently laid up on the reefs, once she was almost claimed by the sea during that haunt Sable; next time she may not escape.

Her plans for the near future seem to be definite enough, including a trip each year to Halifax where she has so many admirers among the "fresh water sailors." There she will be one of the big attractions at the Canadian National Exhibition.

One suggestion for the years to come is that she should be "pensioned" by the Nova Scotia Government and placed on exhibit around the world with an exhibit of Nova Scotia products.

Another suggestion comes from it. C. S. Knaubach of Lunenburg, Bluenose retired from the fishing business with profit to himself and her four partners. His would have her dock housed, her top sides protected from the sun by canvas, her underbody coppered to discourage the worm. And he would have her hauled out on the Lunenburg railway for painting once a year.

BRITISH COLUMBIA STARTS HIGHWAY

VANCOUVER, B.C., Nov. 2.—Work is proceeding steadily on the British Columbia section of the Trans-Canada highway, the route being from Banff to Golden, the Department of the Columbia River, Revelstoke, Kamloops and through the Fraser Valley to the coast.

Meanwhile they are proceeding from Banff to Golden, south through Crowsnest and then through Vermillion Pass and Sinclair Pass and via Nelson to the coast.

WEARING HIGH HEELS BLAMED

Records Show High Heels The Cause of Many Accidents

Montreal—"You women—!" Thus a surgeon at one of the local hospitals as he viciously snipped off half a yard of adhesive plaster.

"What do you mean?" inquired his patient as she submitted an ankle to be strapped.

By way of reply the doctor picked up her shoe, designed by what was a slim strap and a heel seven-eighths of an inch thick—"and that!" he commanded. "Aren't you going for a walk-around one of these time you step off a street car? You don't see men wearing such things."

"Why do women wear high heels? Because men don't know the reason; makers turn out just as slipshod designs in shoes as many what are appropriately termed sensible heels. But womankind seems to prefer being on her toes, even when she is one of a swaying crowd in a street car during rush hour. Heaven help the person next her, who may carry the scar of a spike heel on his foot for life unless he is agile enough to dodge as Madame is swept off her balance.

"Records show that the majority of accidents in this city to or all street cars are sustained by women. Of the women hurt in getting off tramcars, 44 per cent are between the ages of 40 and 60, while between the ages from 30 to 40 years. One year's record showed that 56 per cent of such accidents happened to women and only 26 per cent to men, figures which accounted for seven per cent and children for three per cent.

"Forty per cent is a high danger-our period, for the percentage of accidents was nearly th means for women of between 40 and 50 as for those from 50 to 60. More women came to grief after navigating the street car step than ridged before reaching the pavement. Why? High heels. The car steps are ridged, designed as a means of foothold, but the road surface is often smooth. And it is not the fault of the weather man, for in 1934 almost 50 per cent of the accidents was exactly the same for cars occurred when it was neither snowing nor raining. The following accident chart goes up from November to March when surfaces are treacherous."

Has Tablet Placed In Proper Building

Montreal —A tablet, unveiled in Montreal on Sunday, May 31, to commemorate the fact that Charles Dickens had lived at Racon's Hotel during his visit to this city in 1867, has now been placed on the wrong building had it not been for the fact that a professor of English at the University of Montreal, and president of the Montreal branch of the Dickens Fellowship in North America.

A few years ago a well-known French-Canadian artist painted a picture entitled "Dickens and Bonsecours street," which showed Dickens in front of the Bonsecours building. The local Dickensians, recalling that Dickens had boarded at Racon's, were delighted with it, and decided that the original of the picture should be honored by a tablet. As luck would have it, the picture gave no clue as to what as a Dickensian meeting at which Alberton was present.

"What's this? What's this?" exclaimed the doctor, "Racon's Hotel, numbers 62 to 68 Bonsecours. It was never in Bonsecours street. It is in St. Paul street."

Astonished officials of the Montreal branch hurried to the historic spot, and found that the doctor was right. There in St. Paul street they discovered the Racon's Hotel, not a small, dilapidated building, but an imposing stone structure, whose identity was further emphasized by the fact that it had its name in great relief letters on the front facade.

BODY FOUND IN WATER

Stratford, Ont., Nov. 3.—The body of a man believed to be that of Frank Arnaby, who has been missing from his home here since Wednesday was found this morning lying in the shallow water of the Avon River, a few feet away from the bridge which crosses from Queen's Park to the Island.

Dan Hilsden, an employee of the Parks Board noticed a coat on a bench near the bridge and when he went to investigate, found the body.

Bromhall estimates world wheat import requirements for the present crop year at 776 million bushels.

Canada maintained fifth position in agregate external trade among the principal nations of the world during the especially distorted conditions of 1934.

THE WARDEN'S BANQUET

Warden's banquets are an institution in this county which has seen many an event of this kind.

First, but not least, of the wardens is Charles W. Thompson, who has been chief magistrate of Hastings for the year 1931. Faithful service in the interest of the county brought him the honor of election last January and now at the turn of the autumn as preparations are going forward for the last meeting of the year and the inevitable elections, the warden has played the host to the full. This function is but a tribute to the place of Madoc as the pivot of Centre Hastings. From it many other good men have come and from it the ship of Hastings County through the county's history.

These banquets are rich in their interest and renewal of contact with the county, and of the life of the province and the Dominion. They are important in that from the social spheres because they breed an interest in the problems which absorb the attention of those larger associations, municipalities the Legislature and the House of Commons.

Hastings as a county has varied resources and varied interests. Such events as the warden's banquets are an opportunity for all classes to meet in the common light of matters pertaining to all. Banquets are a social relaxation wherein the real man appears.

Warden Thompson can rest assured that his gift of the gold-headed cane was no mere ordinary presentation. With it went the goodwill of all who have had the pleasure of sitting in council governed by him during this memorable year of trials and yet of progress.

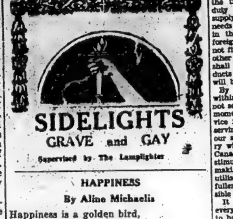
A CHANGE

How fast time flies and what changes it brings is demonstrated by the fact that once upon a time the city had a street railway which passed out of existence because it did not pay, and which is almost forgotten. Doubtless for many years many local residents of the day when the railway would again operate. The removal of the ties before the paving of Front street in the summer of 1914, the year, removed the last sign of the street car system, for hope had long since died because a new generation vehicle of conveyance for the smaller cities was on the scene. It was the motorcar.

It then took many years to make the motor bus the popular conveyance it is today, but at last it came and with it the autobus or street bus.

Now there is no recalling the street railway. Its record in various cities is not too good and the bus and car have won the day.

The death of James Davidson of this city, engineer of the plant which supplied the power to the street railway, recalls the days when trams passed up and down Front street.



GALILEAN DISCOVERIES

Interesting discoveries have come to light in Galilee which have for a great portion of the race more than ordinary significance. The New York Times' commentator says:

"It has been written that the foot of the lowliest could find no league of its soil 'without starting the voices of fathers' who had labored and fought for her. Even deeper emotions are aroused as there are now brought to the light of the sun the very stones that were touched by the feet of those who walked here in the days when it was first preached that the Kingdom of God was at hand.

"Instead of being a land out of which no great thing has come, its people were 'a chivalrous and a gallant race.' It is a country of which Josephus said that it 'has never been without men of courage.' And the Talmud said of them that they were more anxious for honor than for money. In one of its caves the fragments of the skull of a paleolithic man was found. In historic times Galilee had a splendid past. The city of Nazareth, near Nazareth, where excavation was reported in yesterday's Times, a most important place, and it was destroyed by the Romans because of the independent spirit of the inhabitants. It is the traditional land of the annunciation, and it was vindicated also in the affections of the Jews themselves' and became a sanctuary of theirs. The highways of the ancient world between Damascus and Egypt, Tyre and Sidon, Acca and Haifa, passed across it. It was the 'way to the sea.'

"Archeological research is going forward at Megiddo, on the western rim of the plain of Esdraelon, and at Beisan, where the plain extends toward the Jordan at the southeast. Beyond the mountains to the south, Dr. Bade of the Pacific School of Religion has found in tombs, along with memorials covering a thousand years, a coin of the very period in which the Galilean city referred to in yesterday's Times was destroyed, and recalling the verse in the Gospel of Matthew which mentions the Herod (Archelaus), successor of Herod the Great, fear of whom led Joseph to 'withdraw into parts of Galilee.' There, as George Adam Smith said in his geography of the Holy Land, a vision of all the kingdoms of the world was as possible as from the mount of temptation. From that place history A. D. began to be written. Anything that throws more light on its beginnings will be welcomed by all Christendom."

HAPPINESS

By Aline Michaelis

Happiness is a golden bird,
Tameless, flying on;
Just as its lilting note is heard,
Swift as the wind it is gone!

Happiness is for no man's hand,
Captured and caged it must die;
Ever winging to some far land,
Gleaming against the sky!

Never a king has snared it yet,
Search through the world though he might;
Singing it came when the dew was wet,
Vanished at fall of night.

Yet, so fair is this golden bird,
Blessings untold it brings
Him who has glimpsed its flight and heard
Whir of its soaring wings!

WELL. THEY DITCHED the esplanade project.

x x x x

EVENTUALLY, BUT NOT NOW. Notice how the City Council adopted our slogan for the esplanade, "Eventually, Why Not Now?" They just changed one word, instead of a "why" they substituted a "but"—but what a but.

FOUR COUNCILLORS and the Mayor voted for the esplanade, an absent councillor was in favor of it. Seven councillors voted against it. All of the councillors expressed their approval of the esplanade project, but not "Now." Sometime.

BELLEVILLE'S BEAUTIFUL COLLEGIATE and Vocational School was delayed more than ten years, and one generation of boys missed the advantages now available to Collegiate pupils. Opposition, short-sighted at the time, had to be overcome. Today not one citizen of Belleville would return to former conditions under any consideration. Let's not delay the esplanade ten years, lest the parking situation become so acute that cars will have to be hung up on telegraph poles for lack of parking space in the business district. However, Trenton, Picton and Napanee still have plenty of parking space.

THE NEW RAILROAD CAR

When the railroads came, the stage coach went. Now we have the quick-travelling, rubber-tired, comfortable high-way bus, also air transport that soon will take you across the continent in a day.

But the railroad is not going to follow the stage coach into oblivion. The present generation is to see a revolution in railway operation. The change—already in progress—will be sweeping, but once established the economics will be great.

Freight will move at 100 miles an hour on ball-bearing axles drawn by streamlined motors.

Passenger coaches—not trains—may make from 100 to 200 miles an hour safely and smoothly on the track in comfort for travellers.

These coaches will leave at hourly intervals, a great convenience to the public, instead of once or twice a day linked together in a long train.

The iron-horses, wonderfully developed as he is, is likely to follow the stage coach. But the railroads will remain to render surer and finer service.

Roadbeds even now are fairly well prepared for this speed development.—Capper's Monthly.

MODERN ETIQUETTE

By Roberta Lee

Q. How long should a formal call last?

A. Twenty minutes is the prescribed time for a formal call.

Q. What is the proper dress for a ball?

A. Evening dress for women and formal evening dress for men, rather than the tuxedo.

Q. Have pickles a place on the correct dinner party menu?

A. No; they are never served except as an accompaniment or dish-garnishing for cold meats.

Other Papers' Opinions

BUT MADE-IN-CANADA

We are not alone in suffering from trade depression. But the very fact that we are sharing in it with many countries should direct home the truth that we owe our first duty to our own, Today as never the majority of our own needs in things that we have been in the habit of purchasing from foreign countries. What we cannot find at home, we can buy from other parts of the Empire, and we shall get a full return in the duty which those parts of the Empire will buy from us.

By purchasing in Canada and within the Empire, Canadians are not serving the urgent needs of the moment; they are doing a real service for people who have served their wealth. If you all put your shoulders to the wheel that effort will continue, and if we enable Canadian industry to go on we are stimulating Canadian industry and making it possible to develop and utilize Canadian resources. That is fuller measure than would be possible otherwise.

It is a very real duty laid upon every loyal citizen of Canada today to help forward our industries by buying Canadian goods and retaining in this country Canadian money. By so doing they will be doing their share in keeping the development of the land steadily through times of stress and great sacrifice.—Montreal Star.

EFFECTS OF NOISE

The dwellers in the large modern city has become more or less inured —though not reconciled—to the unceasing din which for most of us surrounded. The constant din, day and night, accepted as a fact of inevitable accompaniment of life in populous urban centres. Indeed, the anti-noise campaign goes on without interruption—seemingly, with little effect. But it comes as a shock to read that a "Society for Noise Abatement" has been formed in the peaceful university city of Oxford, England, which declares that noise is a menace to health and, if not cluistered solitude. But, apparently, Oxford has become as busy as the best of them, and the university authorities have become alarmed. The Master of Balliol, who presided over the inaugural meeting, deeply deplored the change as a violation of the rights most prized by students. This is no longer the case that Oxford is quiet and restful for learning. The modern young undergraduate would probably exclaim: "Rot! what of it?" But others are effectively answered by many of the speakers at the meeting, one of whom declared that if the dweller in the modern city had the brain of a man and the ears of a dog, he would probably be dead in a fortnight. Archdeacon Sir Maurice Craig, gave a scientific dissertation on the effects of noise on the human larynx. His remarks are worth consideration. His remark is worth a people holding the views which Sir Maurice pronounced as retrogressive.—Hamilton Spectator.

EMPRESS EUGENIE HATS

The Millinery Review's reference to style seems to hit the mark: "Style implies a certain degree of exclusiveness. When the Eugenies first began to appear we were reminded of old-fashioned hats which date back almost to the Second Empire.

"Where did you get that hat?

Where did you get that tile?
Isn't it a nobby one,
Quite the proper style?"

Very soon Eugenies became as thick as the Autumnal leaves of Vallambrosa. Distinguishing style, the essence of style, was lost. As one New York manufacturer stated it: "If the modern version had not been made ridiculous by adopting it for all occasions, the final publication of the American mass production had not been hastened immediately to a mode which was received in such enthusiasm that the masses generally might have had presented to them a version of the Eugenie mode that would not have looked like a wet hen affair." We are inclined to think that mass production did the trick. Elegance and exclusiveness cannot be sold by the millions. Style in this case broke down under the weight of its own protection. Mass production is all right for such coat, cement, lumber, etc., but, as we see it, if mass production gets busy on the artistic products, people will be driven back to the simple life.—Mail and Empire, Toronto.

PIECE TOGETHER BITS OF LETTER

Toronto, Nov. 3—By piecing together remnants of a discarded letter found in a waste paper basket in an apartment on Jarvis Street, postal investigators and city police developed a clue which resulted in the arrest in Windsor yesterday of Bayard Adamson, alias J. R. Yates on charges of stealing a number of registered letters.

These orders have been cashed in Toronto and Windsor, and so far fifteen of them have been returned to the Postmaster General's office at Ottawa, showing that between $300 and $400 was secured by cashing them. There are still 190 of the stolen orders unaccounted for, and it is feared the amount stolen may run into several thousands of dollars.

Clothing prices are 40.2 per cent below the peak prices of 1920.

SCIATICA AND EXCESS FAT

Both Dispelled by Kruschen

LOST 17 LBS. IN 3 MONTHS

What a pleasant surprise this woman had! Her great trouble was sciatica, and she took Kruschen to rid herself of it. She was not disappointed in that. On the contrary, as well as losing very much pain, she found that she had got rid of a lot of fat as well. She says:—"I have been a martyr to sciatica and rheumatic trouble for years. Only this year I have lain on the floor in agony in the middle of my work, and until the pain wore away it was impossible to move. One day, after reading an advertisement, I thought I would try Kruschen Salts. I took them for about a month, when people began telling me how well I looked.

"I have lost fat that was no good to me, and now, after three months of Kruschen, I only go 168 pounds instead of 185 pounds. I am as a friend's age for women, and used to get so irritable over the least thing. Now that I have got rid of that I only the weak remarked how much better I'd been lately. I have to-day only fat gone—slowly, remember—but the pains of sciatica and rheumatism are gone. I am feeling fine, and look wonderfully healthy, youthful and energetic—more so than ever before. Now 13s.!

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 4s. and 7½c. per bottle.

Smoke in Cities

(New York Times)

Authorities who know the bad effect of smoke in the air we breathe are trying to get the vote of the city to a realization of its seriousness. Any one visiting the parks and other vegetation in the parks can see at a glance that they are suffering as identical spots in the outlying sections flourish. If they give the matter thought they must know that coal smoke, exhaust fumes, acids escaping from gases, keep them from carrying on the normal functions of plant "breathing" which makes a plant healthy. New York should have much more sunshine than ever reaches the city streets. The bright, direct rays cannot penetrate the pall of dirt and gases under which we live. Even penthouse dwellers are not high enough to escape the smoke and the upper currents of air bring them volatile gases of disagreeable odor which rise too rapidly to offend the nostrils of pedestrians.

Doctors are pointing out the dangerous results of breathing impure air. Common sense indicates that air which is so loaded with impurities as to force dust into the nose is a bad effect on human beings. It is thought that certain gases commonly present in New York's atmosphere have a direct bearing on asthma, and the irritation caused by quantities of soot particles taken into the nose, throat and lungs makes a favorable condition for the always present germs of pneumonia, tuberculosis and the common cold.

Science has devised methods of consuming smoke and neutralizing noxious gases. It has provided means of getting rid of rubbish and garbage which were known as great benefits when they were first used, but which are now sources of annoyance and perhaps danger. Not nearly all furnaces burn their own smoke. Many cities have ordinances against polluting the air with black smoke from stacks, but in New York only a colored maid called "the janitor's wife" should be said to commonly health as well as a help to the maid in doing away with garbage, but the acrid, unpleasant fumes from apartment incinerators may be as menacing to health as coal smoke and are certainly equally distressing to the nostrils. Medical men are agreed on the damaging effects of impure air on the human organism. The public will give them the backing they need to improve and enlarge existing ordinances.

Letters to The Editor

ESPLANADE

Editor Ontario Intelligencer,

Dear Sir:

Will you allow me some space in your valued newspaper Re the Esplanade. It does not seem like the proper time to bring this up when the city fathers there this under-taking out, but I felt as one of the heaviest taxpayers on Front St., that I couldn't let the matter pass without expressing a few words on it.

It is certainly too bad that some other time could not purchase the advantage of the Esplanade, for the main reason to relieve the present congested and unskilled which is more than the water main will call for as that work will only employ the unskilled labor and we have a lot of unemployment in that former class. The second reason is that the city will never have a better opportunity than they have at present considering the land the city was taking over for that undertaking.

Another reason that some of the aldermen could not see is; that Front St. is a main thoroughfare, the east side would have been benefited by the opening up thereof it meant a tremendous increase in assessment for City of Belleville, but I suppose speaking of would hinder had at least four stores when completed on the east side.

I understand Mr. Editor that there is another petition out with regard to this question who were never over the proposed esplanade, which does not speak very well for men we put in there to run civic affairs, as before a question of this kind was settled every one should have been acquainted with the proposition.

Now in regards to the auxiliary water main to me it seems like a waste of good money as it doesn't seem reasonable that there is a properly owner and asking him to put in another water main in his house in case he has trouble with the first one, or asking a man to install another set of electric wires in case something goes wrong with them, which practically applies to the second water main. We have gotten alone nicely with the one main and there is no reason why it would not last for a good many years to come.

I just want to take this opportunity of congratulating the mayor and the five aldermen who had the courage to vote on this undertaking.

Again thanking you Mr. Editor for your valuable space.

Yours truly,
Frank Domenico.

At the recent feast of the Italian saint, St. Rocc, in Viterbo, an image of the saint was erected and a thousand candles was shown.

THE TRYST

Beloved!
Like a fighting bird,
That perched outwith my lattice bide
And fluttering there a moment
Chirped, ere it flew again;
Thy greeting setting me
Caressed the waving grass.
Your brooding spirit hovered near
And whispered, I am with you dear,
As through a glass.

Beloved!
Though mine eyelids close,
My soul will slumber not nor sleep
But with the remainder of my heart,
In tryst with thine to keep;
So when the morning breaks.
On that Elysian Chase,
From where the scattered set free
I shall awake, sweet love, with thee
Then face to face.

HIGHWAY THRU TWEED WILL FORGE LINK

J. F. Hill, M.P.P., Tireless In Efforts to Aid East Hastings

VALUE OF ROAD

Probably the import of the announcement made a few days ago in regard to the highway from Belleville to Tweed and Actinolite to connect with the through highway across the country to Ottawa has not been fully grasped. How Belleville and Tweed secured the new highway is an interesting story.

Originally it had been announced that the highway across the middle of the County of Hastings was to pass through Tweed. The people of Tweed looked forward to this with much interest as it would connect the village with the trunk highway from Toronto to Ottawa. But, engineering obstacles were found in the fact that Tweed is farther south than Madoc, so that the highway would be materially lengthened to take in Tweed and the road would be carried to the south. So the revision of the plan called for the route to go by the way from Madoc to Actinolite on to Kaladar and Ottawa. Tweed folk saw themselves outside the highway and Mr. James F. Hill, M.P.P. for East Hastings, who has been an indefatigable worker in the interests of his constituency took up the case of the village and thru his influence and efforts he obtained what Tweed considers an improvement on the original plan and what will prove to be a real asset to the city of Belleville and all the intervening villages along the line—that is, that the roadway from Belleville to Actinolite (Stoney water) has been declared a provincial highway.

With the announcement of the Belleville-Actinolite highway, Tweed is assured of the connection with the Toronto-Ottawa Railway as well as with the front highway No. 2 which runs along Lake Ontario. Bay of Quinte and St. Lawrence River.

Mr. Hill has been closely associated with the highway development in this district. He was a member of the special committee which has supervision of provincial highways. His knowledge of the road question and his particular interest in seeing his riding well served with highways have resulted in this master stroke which will redound to the interest of every portion of the county.

The highway question is now very well solved as far as the southern part of the county is concerned. There is the Belleville-Pembroke-Stirling-Marmora-Madoc highway, the front highway, and there will be the Marmora-Havelock-Campbellcroft highway and the Belleville-Actinolite highway in the network. Only the north part of Trenton will also be part of the road system.

sacs, who told an anti-drought conference here that the high crops of the 1931 grain crop is expected to equal that of last year's record was the largest in Russian history, and that deliveries to the government already exceeded those of the corresponding period last year. At the same time, he said the 1932 sown area is to be extended beyond the present area.

Chicago's Rise

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 3—A wheat market, supported by public and Board of Trade buying orders, that resorted to historical practices, was struggling back to its feet today.

Prices were bid up on deferred deliveries nearly all the way from 30 cents higher than they were less than a week ago. The steady advance continued in the face of a large amount of profit taking which appeared ready to hit the Farm Board.

The manner in which the prices kept climbing brought from professional traders the frank admission of their surprise.

At the opening, prices for yesterday, deferred deliveries were changing hands at almost three cents higher than Saturday and advances that were 40 per cent. higher than the close of trade on October 30th.

Russia's declaration through Berlin that it had not withdrawn from the wheat market was another of the market closed. News that the Soviet would not be an exporter for the time furnished one of the prevailing bullish factor to the rewarkened market yesterday.]

Note the lesser lights have followed suit, though His Majesty's sentiments prevail in size and setting. 99 Jurors Called Before 12 are Finally Selected

Panel in Communist Trial is Completed at Toronto

TRIAL OPENS

(By Jack Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 3—Ninety-nine jurors were called in the County of York Fall Assizes today before 12 good men and true were finally selected to hear the case of Sam Carr, Ukrainian, and seven others, charged with conspiracy to incite to unlawful action; acting as members of an unlawful association; and being parties to a seditious conspiracy.

Printers on Bail

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 3 (CP)—Bernard Mesdon and Joseph Kleinstein, partners in a local printing establishment, were found guilty of contempt of court by Mr. Justice Wright in County of York Fall Assizes here today and were remanded until tomorrow for sentence.

The two men were arrested on his Lordship's order yesterday when he found that printing and calling a "protest meeting" against the trial of nine alleged Communists, which is proceeding in the same court, had been printed by Mesdon and Kleinstein.

Shortly after the jury in the main trial had been selected today, the two printers were brought before the court. Several witnesses for the local police force testified as to the distribution of the circulars. One of them, Constable James Craigie, declared he had found the pamphlets in his mail box at home.

Power to Destroy Press

Both Mesdon and Kleinstein declared they did not know from whom they received the order to print the circulars. He had, however, recognized a photograph of the man at police headquarters, they said, had been turned in to the police for "proof" purposes. The balance of more than 4,000 had been seized by the police.

"It is in the power of this court to destroy this printing press entirely," declared Mr. Justice Wright, "if do not wish to impose so severe a penalty. I do not know whether to fine you or send you to jail. I will reserve judgment until tomorrow. This is a very serious offence —this calling for a demonstration against law and order."

The men were then released on bail of $1,000.

The Baychimo was left ice-bound southwest of Point Barrow with sixteen of a crew who will stand by until ice breaks in the spring. The Baychimo passengers arrived from Seattle where they disembarked from the S. S. Victoria yesterday.

Mr. Bannycastle's tribute to the airplane service at Nome, Alaska, for the efficient way in which two planes made three return trips each from Nome to the Baychimo, a distance of six hundred miles and safely landed the nineteen members of the party, all but two of whom made connection with the S. S. Victoria, last South that same night. The second last plane arrived hours before the ship sailed.

The last plane, with three of the crew, remained with the ice-bound vessel, but the trio will be brought out on the United States cutter, the Northland.

last week that a price of 85 cents for May Delivery would not be surprising, was hailed as the first decisively optimistic sign of the present movement.

Buying Heavily

New York, Nov 3—The New York Times says Wall Street learned large-scale buying of wheat to a powerful financial group headed by Arthur W. Cutten, prominent Chicago grain operator.

"The Cutten market operations," the story related, "which are said to surpass in magnitude any which he has previously directed in wheat, are being carried on through the Chicago and Winnipeg markets.

"He is reported to have the encouragement of the Federal Farm Board which holds close to 200,000,000 bushels of grain acquired in the course of its price stabilization program.

"Rumors that he is acting for the farm board in a huge wheat pool are not credited here, however, by informed brokers.

"Cutten operations are acquainted with his plans said he was personally directing the operations and declined he is acting for other interests, asserting that he is personally interested in the possibilities of wheat by a careful study of the cereal's position.

"According to Wall Street information, the group has the largest position in wheat of any interests in the country since the Farm Board. He began buying cautiously as long ago as last August and has been increasing his line steadily ever since, even during the sharp advances of the last four weeks."

A considerable part of Cutten's buying of wheat during the last week or so has been conducted through Wall Street houses with Chicago Board of Trade connections.

New York, Nov. 3—While wheat was continuing its spectacular advance in the principal world markets, Wall Street traced large scale buying of the grain to a powerful financial group headed by Arthur W. Cutten, one of the boldest and most successful operators in the country. The Cutten operations, which are said to surpass in magnitude any which he has previously directed in wheat, are being carried on through the Chicago and Winnipeg markets. He is reported to have the encouragement of the Federal Farm Board, which holds close to 200,000,000 bushels of grain acquired in the course of its price-stabilization program. Rumors that he is acting for the Farm Board in a huge wheat pool are not credited here, however, by informed brokers.

Yesterday's advance in wheat, which coincided with reports from Europe that Russia has been eliminated as an exporter of wheat for the remainder of this season, as well as next year, carried the four active options to the highest levels of the current movement. The bull wave became apparent that Russia had been seriously harrassed by inability to deliver wheat under contracts that were entered into earlier in the year, or before the inadequate harvest upset the Soviet calculations.

Experiment Fails

It is understood that, through experiments carried on by Arthur W. Campbell, perhaps the largest individual wheat grower in this country, a new kind of hard wheat was introduced in Russia. Experiments in a limited way carried on by Mr. Campbell were highly successful, with the result that a large part of this year's crop in Russia was planted in the hand-wheat variety.

Reports from Russia recently have indicated that the report to the experiment was failure, and that almost one has per yield per acre very poor, but the wheat grown was of high quality. What it could not be marketed abroad.

assailed the Hoover administration. Whatever the election results, they will be generally interpreted as the political sentiment toward the chief executive.

Tie is Best Hope

Should the Republican return representatives from the three seats traditionally theirs, the most they could do would be tie the Democrats at 216, as the Democrats have virtually been conceded victory in the other two districts which are normally Republican.

The present line-up gives the Democrats 214; Republicans 213; Farmer-Labor 1; vacancies 7. One vacancy in the fifth New Jersey district, usually Republican, will be filled December 1. It may be the decisive district, should today's elections go as in the past.

Democratic hopes, in the first New Hampshire, will not be filled until January 5, for the first representative to participate in House organization when Congress convenes on December 7th.

The dispute in New York between Governor Franklin Roosevelt and Alfred E. Smith, the 1928 Democratic presidential nominee, over a license restraint amendment to the state constitution has bothered the Democrats. Roosevelt and Presidential timber and Smith continues the titular party leader.

Battles Talk

Anton J. Cermak, Democratic Mayor of Chicago, however, last night in New York battled this talk about a Smith-Roosevelt disagreement. He held the issue was merely a state matter.

In New York the Democrats also hope to capture control of the Assembly.

The New Jersey gubernatorial race, led for a time by two anti-prohibitionists—Harry Moore, Democrat, and David Baird, Republican —had the wet and dry issue injected by a third candidate. Edmund B. Haines has Anti-Saloon League support.

Ohio has a $7,500,000 state welfare bond issue to vote on.

Pennsylvania is electing a Supreme Court Justice and a local school scrap among Republicans in the Pittsburgh-Allegheny county over a commissioner is reaching its climax.

Indications are that voting will be usually heavy for "off year elections." The weather forecast is generally fair.

Mr. Tenney declared as he paused upon Pitt River Charley who recovered consciousness and sitting with his back against the trunk of a tree, his dark, evil face absolutely expressionless. Then he turned to the valet, "You drive down the road a bit, bomber, and wait three minutes, sonny. Then come back with the car. Me an' Mr. Tichener's gotta' to hold court here an' us it's to be a private session."

He lighted the cigarette rescued from the butt of Joseph's little rifle and screwed it together and wrapped his bandanna handkerchief around one end, in order to get a good grip on it.

He grasped a handful of shirt in the middle of Pitt River Charley's back and with one savage jerk the man's torso was raised.

"Him alleep, Joseph," Tichenor ordered gently, "ye you'll be shot to your stomach. Me an' you already binding Pitt River Charley's hands in the log of Eden Valley club, and Mr. Tenney was gazing earnest by upward for a limb to pass your over.

So Joseph, sickened, departed in the car and when he had gone two hundred yards he heard a succession of profanity echoing through the valley. They're cutting his baby back to ribbons with that steel rasp tool," the valet decided.

Nate Tichenor questioned Pitt River Charley and when the half-breed refused to talk and took refuge in aboriginal sullenness, Nube Tenney used the rasmrod, while his victim hung helpless from a limb his toes just touching the earth. His judges knew his kindness that only quick work and dirty work would bring the information so vitally needed.

"Who hired you, Charley?" Tichenor kept repeating patiently, while Tenney's arm ached and fell with a momentary pause to give the killer time to answer.

"Babson—of the bank.'

"And the price?"

"Five hundred—half down.'

"You killed Jim Hensley 18 years ago, didn't you?"

Silence.

"Guilty as hell," Mr. Tenney murmured. "Court's adjourned. Slip the lop of the rifle off'n his hands an' around his neck. I'll hist him with that hose yonder."

"Not for a man of man's size, Rube. He's just fined two hundred and fifty dollars," said Nate to Pitt River Charley. "You beat it the best way you know how down to Valley Center and have Doc Donaldson fix you up. Tell him to send the bill to Babson. And when you're well, fork your horse and get out of this country, because if I ever catch you inside the limits of this county I'm going to pull and get busy on you without further warning. Understood?"

The killer nodded humbly, they cash him loss and, sans his rifle, he shambled off down the road.

"What's Babson got ag'in you, Nate?" Mr. Tenney demanded.

"Nothing. The poor fool thinks he has.'

"I'vod better let me down an' bunnel him," the practical Tenney pleaded. "Somebody's gotta' kill him an when they ask for it that-a way. I'm in favor of accommodatin' 'em.

"Shut up, you loyal, lovable scoundrel," said the valet, and he put Joseph's back to the Circle K. "He's cash a shoe. Set in and watch him back to Joseph in the morning. Here comes your car. Good night, Rube, and thanks for your assistance. And remember! This thing never happened."

"There's fool an' durned fools an' barbation, sarcasm, and imbecility," Mr. Tenney roared, "an' you are all four rolled into one."

INSTALMENT XX

Hope was again springing eternal in the human breast. Nate Tichenor during the day, to have good news from Eden Valley, and for a time Christian man he was faintly afraid he had missed the opportunity to fortitude with which he awaited the expected tidings.

His fear was considerably shattered, therefore, when Nate Tichenor sinned into the bank and greeted him cordially. "Nice growin' weather we're having, Babson," he insisted, as he took the visitor's chair beside the banker's desk.

Babson was wondering if this cool well-bred worldling had escaped Pitt River Charley and, if so, had Pitt River Charley told? How much did this devil, Nate Tichenor know?

"Pitt River Charley made my aunt a widow, and I've been trying to figure out why you took him to make me join my ancestors," said Nate. "I think I know the reason. You're afraid of me. You think that with me out of the way you can get the Eden Valley water without loss and feathers."

"I—I don't know—what you're talking—about, Nate."

"Well, listen to me just the saint. If you want a fight, you can have it, and I'll be sorry about it, too. I'll not put Pitt River Cahrley in the witness chair. Word of honor, I'll not. I'll fight you on the merits of the case and may the best man win. Shh don't need another killing after me. Do you know what I'm talking about now?"

"I think I do, Tichenor."

"After a while you'll be sure of it. Remember, whatever you do, short of murder, is O.K. with me. I'm more than nine years old and can take care of myself. Well, good-by. I'll see you at the mass meeting this afternoon."

By the time this had closed at twelve o'clock, Babson had recovered his composure. Strange fellow, this Nate Tichenor. So he was going to fight the fight on its merits, eh? Well, if he did slide in that re-solve Babson knew he would detest him . . . . . Said he'd be at the mass meeting, eh?

"Henry," Babson called in dulcet tones, "come here!"

Mr. Rookby obediently reported at his master's desk.

"Henry, this fellow Nate Tichenor is going to fight us all over the lot. His actions will be such as to haf a chance," he began. "He must not have that chance." "I want you to scatter around in the crowd and plant quite a number of hecklers and interrupters. I'll open the meeting and before I get thru with Tichener they'll want to lynch him. Then when he tries to address the crowd I want him cried down, booed of the platform, rough-housed. If "Leave it to me," Mr. Rookby assured Babson. "I owe the skunk a poke myself. I know just what to do."

Shortly after luncheon at the Circle, K ranch as Lorry Kershaw was about to enter her coupe and drive to Valley Centre, Rube Tenney came out of the house with two six-shooters in shoulder holsters under his arms. Lorry saw them as he struggled into his coat.

"Well, who are you out to kill today, Rube?" she queried jocularly.

"Nobody's hope, but somebody if I have to. You heeled, Miss Lorry?"

"Certainly not. Why should I be?"

"You're goin' down to that mass meetin' in Valley Centre, ain't you?"

"Yes."

"Bo's Nate Tichenor. I listened to some talk while I was in town the other day an' it seems folks got an idea Nate's goin' to try to keep from Perkrn Valley the water they are fixin' to grab out of Eden Valley Creek. Somebody's worked up a undercurrent feelin' ag'in Nate. I'm sorter superstitious; I like to have few capable friends in a crowd that ain't friendly to me."

Lorry got out of the car, entered the house, strapped a six-shooter, with a full belt of cartridges, around her waist, slipped on a light coat to conceal her armament and got behind the wheel again. Rube Tenney slipped in beside her, and they rolled away for Valley Centre.

A crowd of perhaps five hundred persons occupied the temporary board benches Babson had provided in the plaza and Babson was on a raised platform just opening the meeting when Rube and Lorry arrived.

He was a good speaker, clear and incisive, and had a trick of uttering those catch phrases which aroused the unthinking. Babson proceeded to outline the method of organizing an irrigation district, reminded his listeners that there was but one source of supply, to wit: the waters of Eden Valley Creek. down which hundreds of thousands of acre-feet of water went to waste and ought to be well they know. More applause. Then Babson proceeded to dilate on his plan for tapping Eden Valley Creek in the hills, leading it to the natural reservoir he had discovered and thence down into Furlorn Valley. Adroitly he painted a picture of future prosperity, of denser crops, of increased land values, of happy homes and the smiling faces of little children. And then, suddenly clenching his fist, he yelled:

"But the silver cloud we see before us has a dirk and dismal lining, my friends. We have in Eden Valley three riparian owners, Christian Tichenor, the Mountain Valley Power Company, of which this same Tichenor is the sole boss and Nate Tichenor, his worthless nephew. Now, Christian Tichenor informs me that his company plans to erect a power station below his proposed dam and manufacture hydro-electric power, I say, here and now, to Nate Tichenor that I think he lies. He purposes erecting that dam for the purpose of impounding the flood waters and selling them to Furlorn Valley at an exorbitant price.

"I have here a petition to the board of supervisors, respectfully questing permission to organize the Furlorn Valley Irrigation District. It is necessary that every farmer in the valley whose lands are susceptible to irrigation from Eden Valley should sign the petition before this meeting adjourns. This way, my friends, Dog'n crowd."

Nate Tichenor walked quietly upon the platform, bowed to Babson and then to the crowd. "I am that Nate Tichenor, the man you have just heard," he began.

Babson was right; a voice cried harshly.

A dead cat sailed over the heads of the crowd and struck him in the face. Overripe tomatoes and cantaloupes followed. Then the cop-pers rang and, as with one voice, the crowd cried: "Throw the outlaw out. . . . . The dirty killer, throw him out. Does he think we're crazy? Kill him. Lynch him. Tar and feather him!"

"Silence, right," a voice cried shrilly. It was Henry Rookby's. "We haven't any tar handy, but up the street a block they're spreading crude oil on the top dressing of gravel on the highway. Give him a bath in that, spill a feather mattress over him and send him back to Eden Valley."

There was a rush of a dozen men toward Tichenor. They swarmed over him, punching and kicking him; presently, bloody and disheveled, he was on their shoulders and they were running up the Valley Centre Boulevard with him, with Henry Henry Rookby flitted, the crowd Henry Rookby flitted, cheering on his worthy friend.

"So you organized this, did you?" Lorry Kershaw's voice spoke in his ear. "Yaj' You're out!" And she brought the barrel of her pistol down on his head. He screamed and staggered and with the fury of a tiger she struck him again and felled him to the pavement. Then a huge form thrust into the crowd.

"Gangway, animals," Rube Tenney was roaring, striking out left and right with his guns and clearing a path for himself and Lorry, who, with drawn pistol, guarded her henchman's rear. A man grabbed at her, weapon and instantly she fired, bullet taking effect in the man's leg.

At the sound of the shot the crowd scattered like quail. To left and right they fled, into shops and vacant lots; and up the street Tenney and Lorry saw a dozen men spilling crude oil over Nate Tichenor, while another stood by ripping open a pillow. This one Lorry fer-shae dropped where he stood, while Rube Tenney ran forward and commenced smashing into them. They dropped their victim and closed on Rube; they got one of his guns and beat him over the head with it; when he fell they kicked him. But not for long. Lorry Kershaw, standing forty feet away, brought her gun up five times; five times she fired —and in the centre of Valley Boulevard Rube Tenney lay, face down, with five men stretched around him. Behind the girl Henry Rookby and one other man were stretched.

Swiftly the girl reloaded her gun and came down the street, seeking in the crowd on each side for Henry Babson. They knew whom she was seeking, knew that the blood of gun crafters of fighting men flowed in her veins and that, if she found Babson, she would kill him.

From his office in the little town calaboose Bill Rooney waddled forth. six-shooter in hand. "Put up that gun, Miss Kershaw," he commanded. "You're under arrest.'

"So you took pains to hide yourself while this outrage was being consummated, didn't you, Rooney? You knew it was going to happen. The whole thing was planned."

She brought her gun up and fired; Rooney's high pinched hat flew off; his head and he scuttled back to the haven of his jail office, leaving Lorry Kershaw to parade down one side of Valley Boulevard and up the other, searching for Silas Babson.

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 12. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 12.

"If we bring him alive, the reward is to be greater," exclaimed their leader, knocking aside the deadly gun. So they bound Tarzan and rode away with their unconscious captive. Hours later, when he regained his senses, he found himself securely tied, lying on a piece of carpet, alone in a dirty goatskin tent.

He could not move his mighty muscles. Before long a man approached. Tarzan recognized the evil features of Rokoff, the Russian. "Ah, m'sieur, this is a pleasure" he sneered, kicking the ape-man repeatedly. Tarzan made no reply, and at last the villain went out.

For a long time silence reigned. Then Tarzan's trained ear caught the sound of hand. Then his name softly whispered. a stealthily moving body. Near it came. "Who are you?" he asked. GERMAN FRENCH WHEAT SPROUTS IN THE SHOCKS

80 Millions Bushels Unfit For Milling, is Report

RUSSIA TO EXPORT

Paris, Nov. 3—Officials at the Russian Embassy said today that the Soviet Government expects to continue its export wheat sales in the west and they denied a statement attributed to the Russian ambassador in which he was quoted as saying that Soviet exports would fall off considerably.

It was said today that the quality of Russian wheat for 1931 is somewhat lower than last year but that its protein content exceeds the International average as considerable this dried.

Berlin, Nov. 3 (AP)—Wet weather, which is causing millions of bushels of German grain in the wheat to sprout in the shocks, is diminishing the size of the world surplus which decreased markets during the first nine months of this year.

In German market circles it was said that from 30,000,000 to 50,000,000 bushels would be needed in Germany because of the weather and would have to be sought for fodder.

Russian World Control

The same economic plan Russian export organizations are trying to secure control of markets to meet their futures commitments in Great Britain and that Russian wheat exports proceed 2,000,000 bushels a week under the week preceding—to get control of the market was stated at the Soviet Embassy said the country considers it has a responsibility for home needs, with some for export.

Some statisticians compared Germany's present cereal crops with the poor years of 1924 and 1925. Whether these factors will result in the importation of wheat into Canada or whether orders will go to Argentina, Russia or Europe is elsewhere, cannot now be determined, grain authorities said.

Privately, while reaching consular officials said Russian crops were poor in Siberia and the Ukraine, with its fair harvest in the Volga Valley, and that a considerable portion of the Soviet Spring campaign is threatened. Officials said the present world crop is not far in excess of world needs.

Denial by Russia

Moscow, Nov. 3 (AP)—In spite of heavy losses due to drought, Russia's grain crops this year will at least equal those of last year Vyacheslaf Molotoff, president of the Council of People's Commissaries, told an anti-drought conference here.

The abowin, he said, was made possible by the collective farms and the state farm developments. Communes among millions of people such as used to falter any years, he said, are now unknown in Russia due to socialist organization.

In spite of the loss of several hundred million bushels of grain this year, Molotoff declared, the ready has harvested more than last year and that the country has no doubt the plan to exceed last year's crops will be fulfilled. The Winter sowing, he said, exceeds that of 1930 and the Spring sowing in 1932 is expected to be more than 10 1931.

BILLIARDLIKE HEAD HOPEFUL

Scientist Sees Hope For Men With Shining Domes

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 3—If your head looks more like a billiard ball than a hairdresser's ad, it may only be a sign that your anterior pituitary gland is off its feed.

The University of Illinois Research and Education Hospital let it be known today that it is continuing experiments started by Dr. H. Norman Bengtson of Maywood, Ill., which may cause bald-headedness.

Until now, it was believed by medical authorities that baldness was caused by defective thyroid gland functioning. Dr. Bengtson, after centially discovered, one day, that a new growth on a rat's head made the head of a woman to whom he was giving abundant extracts in treatment of her tendency to overweight.

Dr. Bengtson considers that the anterior pituitary gland as the base of the endocrine glands the growth of hair. One of his subjects, his records show, was a man of 56, bald for two years, who developed a complete growth of hair which eventually turned black after several months treatment.

It was announced, however, that the effectiveness of the pituitary extract remains to be proved.

WHEAT PRICES SURGE STEADY

Cumulative Force is Most Significant Since Fall of 1929

WINNIPEG, Nov. 2.—Once again the wheat market is booming swing ing upward with gathering momentum in the closing hours of trade. Record advances of almost three cents a bushel in all three futures on the board of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. The cumulative force of the rise after limited advances over a six-week period, marks the most significant upward movement since the fall of 1929.

Winnipeg, Nov. 3—The rise in wheat prices is more than a flash in the pan, it is the result of trends toward normal conditions and points towards a revival in trade which will do much to set fear at rest in most minds." This was the statement made late last night by Premier J. R. Brownlee, in Edmonton.

Alberta's estimated had a 100,000,000 bushel wheat crop unsold and on a basis of 15 per cent. increase in price farmers of Alberta will receive between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 more than their wheat when it is marketed.

Food Facts.

By DR. R. E. LEE

BREAD is not only our best but our most economical food, an important contribution in these days of careful budgeting of expenditures for the table. It is brought straight of only in the familiar white loaf form, but in an almost endless variety of loaves, rolls, buns, biscuits, coffee breads, etc., and made of many different types of flour. By using the choice of bread the diet can be given the sort of appetizing variety that children as well as adults find appealing.

Bread is an important source of carbohydrates — supplying energy to the body — and protein, material for growth and repair. Wheat protein, mostly gluten, ranks with the best proteins of vegetable origin. But bread made of milk, yeast, shortening and flour, is a splendid food, supplying, besides fat, fibre, salt and vitamins.

A well-rounded diet can be had with bread, butter and milk. Of the everyday foods, bread and butter is richest in calories, the measure of energy-producing characteristics of food. A slice of bread and butter will supply 116 calories. About 2700 are needed daily by the average man. Bread and butter contain 1624 calories to the pound, as against 900 for a pound of meat lean, 765 for boiled eggs and 1,810 for boiled rice.

Bread is one of the most readily digestible of the foods. This is partly due to the yeast, which raises the dough rendering the bread porous and open to the action of the digestive juices. Yeast also acts upon the gluten of the flour, conditioning it, making it soft and elastic and rendering it more easily digestible.

There are also certain by-products formed during the fermentation process which give to bread its characteristic pleasing flavor. Finally, yeast has a direct nutritive value in the loaf. It is rich in protein and one of the best known sources of vitamins. The more yeast that is used in making the bread, the shorter the period of time necessary for fermentation and the greater the food value.

Many years ago the baker and the housewife had to make their own yeast with potatoes, malt and hops. Today, the yeast manufacturer has placed in their hands yeast in a convenient form,' dependable and ready to use without any preliminary labor.

Consumption of wheat in bread form is highly important to the farmer. An extra slice of bread a day for everyone in Canada would mean the consumption of an additional 6,000,000 bushels of wheat annually.

REUNION OF MITZ FAMILY

Birthday of Gardiner Mitz is Also Celebrated

A very pleasing event took place recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Frest of Ivanhoe. The occasion being to celebrate the birthday of Mrs. Frest's father, Mr. Gardiner Mitz, of Malloway. The day being an ideal one—a bright October day—a large company was enabled to be present to enjoy the festivities of the hour. Dinner was served in the spacious dining room and to say the "spread" was elegant, would be putting it mildly, for the nicely decorated tables fairly groaned with all the delicacies of the season, in the centre of which stood a huge, beautifully decorated birthday cake. Mr. Mitz's four little grand-daughters acted as table waitresses and served the guests. They made a pretty picture indeed, dressed in their white uniforms. The little girls were Aileen and Dorothy Mitz, Lena Deller and little Marjorie Frest. After all had done full justice to the delicious menu of viands, the company gathered in the parlor to spend an hour in social intercourse, after which a short program followed.

Mr. Mitz, who was taken very much by surprise, was presented with a beautifull bound Bible and Hymnary by his grandson, Gordon Deller, on behalf of the company. Informal speeches were given by Mr. Mitz and also by his brother Charlie, mostly reminiscences of other days.

Nearly all of the company had to take some part in the program; some gave instrumental music, the younger element gave recitations and songs; Mrs. Jamie Deller accompanied her daughter, Lena, who sang a very appropriate song; Aileen and Dorothy sang a very pleasing number, and little Marjorie gave a recitation. Mrs. George Hollinger sang two sacred solos, accompanied by Mrs. Bronson Mitz. All very much regretted the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O. Mitz and son, Ross, of Oilawa. They sent messages of regret at not being able to be present.

Mr. Joseph Mitz is the younger brother of Mr. Gardiner and Chas. Mitz, but has been a resident of Oilawa for the past twenty-nine years.

Mr. and Mrs Prest proved themselves ideal host hostess, for they gave the friends a very enjoyable time and all came away feeling they had spent a very happy day together.

CHARITY BALL TO BE HELD

Every Moose - Lodge in Ontario Will Hold Ball For Charity

Last night the Loyal Order of Moose held their regular monthly meeting in their lodge rooms. The gathering was largely attended and considerable business was done during the evening. After the lodge meeting the members were entertained by the playing of various games. Various committees were appointed for the Moose Charity Ball that is to be held in December. All committees are working overtime so that the dance will be one of the largest ever held in Belleville. All proceeds are to be turned over to charity and every Moose lodge in Ontario will stage a charity ball some time in the first week of December. This is a novel way to raise funds for charity at this time and the officers of the local lodge feel assured that they can make the affair a huge success.

SILVER WEDDING GROOM'S SECOND

Bloomingdale, Nov. 3.—Thomas Eelford, one of Waterloo County's most esteemed residents, last week end celebrated his second silver wedding anniversary.

Mr. Bedford's first wife died 28 years ago, after they had been married a quarter-century. Three years later he married the present Mrs. Bedford, and Saturday was the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding.

Fifty-four guests, all relatives of the couple, gathered to do them honor. Many beautiful gifts of silver were presented, and their family tendered them a purse of gold. Harold McPherson of Toronto, a son-in-law, acted as toastmaster assisted by P. R. Bedford, a son, also of Toronto.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. After the final course of dinner has been served, is it proper to remain at the table and talk?

2. If it is proper for a man to smoke after dinner and while still at the table, should he drop his cigarette butts and ash into the saucer?

3. Should a hostess place ash receivers on the table?

4. Should the guests help the hostess with the dishes?

5. When seating guests at the table, should a man and his wife sit next each other, opposite each other, or how, if there are other guests, also?

6. Is the host supposed to sit at the head or foot of the table?

7. Will you please let me know whether the letter in the corner of this letter paper is correct? It is the initial of my third or confirmation name.

F.

1. Yes, if the hostess wishes to, and this leisurely enjoyment suits the convenience of the household. Often at an informal dinner, this is an especially friendly time.

2. No—No. This is a pet aversion of mine, and I am delighted to have you call the question to that we may chat about it together. A well bred person—and I wish to be most emphatic about this—never, never, puts ashes on a dish other than one especially designated for ashes. If there is not such an ivy conveniently near, the guest should ask for one.

3. The one thing in the world I dislike at a restaurant. Don't ever put the ashes on a dish that is for food and not for ashes. Have the waiter bring an ash tray.

I can think of few things more objectionable, more unattractive, than watching a smoker put ashes on a saucer of a coffee cup, or on a bread and butter plate, or on a dessert plate. We do not at all need to hesitate about asking for an ash tray—it is always easy to get one, and no hostess ever minds being asked for one.

3. Yes. Nowadays when smoking is so much "done" at table, the hostess knows that she must provide for this habit. And there are now offered for such attractive ones that she finds joy in buying them and in providing them for her guests.

4. No, the hostess should have other ideas than this. She should plan to keep her service problems as far away from the consciousness of her guests as it is possible to have them. When she invites guests to dine at her home, she should do as many things as possible before they arrive, and leave the things that need not be done for a later time. Surely this applies to the washing of the dishes.

5. The social rule is never to place a husband and wife next each other at a dinner. They should not be placed opposite each other either, unless this cannot be avoided.

6. The place where the hostess sits is nominated the "head" of the table. Opposite her is the host, at the "foot" of the table. The hostess usually plans to sit facing the door near the kitchen of the serving-pantry. Then, if necessary, she can direct the service. However, if there is no service in the household she will probably find it more convenient to sit near the entrance of the kitchen or pantry. In fact it will be more convenient to give her to get something from the kitchen.

7. Usually, when we have only letters on the letter paper we use the initial of the first name.

Eating Watermelon

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Kindly advise me whether it is correct to use both a knife and fork when eating watermelon?

M. J.

This is considered the very best form. The small knife and fork, the so-called "tea or buffet" knife and fork, or the fruit knife and fork are especially convenient, but the medium size knife and fork may also, of course be used.

LABOR PARTY IS AGAIN HIT

Loses 201 Seats, Tories Gain 144 in Municipal Elections

London, Nov. 3—The avalanche that buried the Labor Party in the general elections last Tuesday was evident again Monday in the municipal elections held throughout England and Wales. In over 300 cities and boroughs elections were held to determine the personnel of the local Councils.

At midnight eighty results were known. These showed the Conservative Party had gained 140 seats and had lost five; the Labor Party had gained five and lost 206 seats, the Liberals had gained seventeen and lost three; Independents gained twenty-one and lost nine seats.

Labor Losses

The early returns showed the Labor Party had lost its control over several important provincial towns. The party hitherto controlled the Councils in twenty of the more important centres. Through the election yesterday, however, it lost one seat and the majority at Derby; twelve seats and the majority at Birkenhead; eleven seats and the majority at Stoke; eleven seats at Bradford, nine at Liverpool and a similar number at Sheffield and Manchester.

Final results will not be known until tonight. All members of the twenty-eight Borough Councils of London, where elections are triennial, retire this year. One-third of the members of each provincial Council compulsorily retire each year. Altogether there were 1,380 seats, with about 2,700 candidates running. Three-cornered contests were reduced to a minimum by arrangements between the anti-Labor parties.

On the Defensive

The attack was placed on the defensive as a result of the general election of 1929. Commencing last November, a swing to the Conservatives was evident in the municipal elections. This, coupled with the overwhelming defeat of Labor in the general elections, placed the party in a decidedly unfavorable position.

In many areas the dominance of Labor members on the Councils for years was brought about by a coalition of Conservatives and Liberal candidates, who now fight the elections jointly. Throughout the above has interested very little the majority of the anti-Laborites has been for economy in local government. While the Laborites urged the danger of social services being starved.

RAILWAYMEN REFUSE CUT

N.R. and C.P.R. Name Isaac Pitblado as Their Representative

Toronto, Nov. 3—Engineers, conductors, firemen and telegraphers on the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways and affiliated systems in Canada to the number of 26,500, and drawn from every part of Canada, have refused, through their executive officers, to accept a general wage cut of 10 per cent. placed before them by the companies.

The decision was reached following many conferences between railway brotherhood officers and the companies. The result of the decision reached at the conference is that the railway companies have applied to the Minister of Labor at Ottawa for the establishment of a board under the Industrial Disputes and Investigation Act.

The companies have named Isaac Pitblade, K.C., of Winnipeg, who has acted on many Boards of Conciliation, as their representative, and when the Government is made of the creation of the board the men will name their representative. The two must appoint the Chairman, and failing to agree, the Minister of Labor makes the choice.

In their decision to refuse the wage cut of 10 per cent. the men say that they are now working on a scale which is from 6½ to 7 per cent. lower than that in operation in the United States. They also claim that in order to aid the unemployment situation they agreed to a reduction in mileage allowances, and also made the monthly running time 26 days instead of a full 30 or 31 days.

"We most strenuously object to taking any further reduction in our duties," said a member of one of the brotherhoods last night.

The last reduction came by affecting the brotherhoods was about ten years ago, when a cut of 12½ per cent. was made.

$75,000 SEWER PLAN

Oshawa, Nov. 3.—In order to provide employment, the Oshawa City Council at the regular meeting last night ordered that the Bloor street sewer in connection with the sewerage disposal system be under taken at once. This section will cost $75,000 and several hundred men will be put to work under City Engineer F. B. Coedike.

Will Tattered and Torn is Construed by JudgeBateson

Document Interpreted By Judge Good, Puzzles IN 163 PIECES

London (By The Canadian Press) — Alexander Dingwall Bateson, of the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, proved himself an expert in jig-saw puzzles in the Probate Court, recently when a will was produced that had been torn into 163 pieces. The solicitor producing it said he had stuck a number of pieces on a large sheet of paper, but he had been able to place correctly only 76 of the fragments.

There were 15 pieces of writing for which he could not find a place, and 70 pieces of margin and blank paper. Justice Bateson examined the large sheet that had additional pieces, and then said, "I don't think you are very good at jig-saw puzzles. I have tried one of the sharp pieces and fitted it into the jig-saw at once."

His lordship said the solicitor might make an affidavit and probate would then be granted of the document as placed together and completed.

The case was that of Clegg v. England, and concerned the will of Harriett England, formerly of Goole Yorkshire.

H. B. Durley Grazebrook, of the Treasury Solicitor's department, for the case, explained in the Court that Mr. Clegg was seeking to obtain probate of the estate. Originally, solicitors prepared a draft will and Harriett England signed the official copy. Some time later she tore her copy of the will into pieces. These, however were secured, and with the original draft which had been retained they were presented for probate.

Ottawa, Nov. 3—Between 65 and 75 men left almost destitute by the liquidation of their employer, a large Northern fishing corporation, are holding a valuable Junkers aero plane, a fleet of boats on rivers and lakes over 250 miles of Northern inland waterways, and other assets of the corporation, pending payment of $10,000 alleged to be owing them in wages, according to news which had filtered down to Ottawa from the district around Senneterre, Que.

CARE IN TEST SPORT'S HEART

Dr. Brooks Warns 1,900 To Improve Examinations

New York, Nov 3—Warning more than 1,900 physicians attending the New York Academy of Medicine's graduate fortnight to examine prospective athletes carefully for possible heart defects before permitting them to indulge in strenuous sports, Dr. Harlow Brooks of Bellevue Hospital explained that no heart trouble follows heavy sports activities if the individual has had no previous cardiac ailment.

"An individual may continue heavy heavy exercise during the active physical years of his life," Dr. Brooks said, "without permanent detriment to his heart. If disease of the heart has pre-existed, anything beyond temperance in the way of physical effort is attended with serious risk. You may continue athletics of a character suited to their ages indefinitely."

The only exceptions to these cases, Dr. Brooks said, were those in which some infection such as rheumatism attacked the individual after his examination. Dr. Brooks explained that such acute infections affected the heart frequently and the condition continually crippled the patients.

"Although persons with healthy hearts can freely partake of sports" he said, "it is never advisable for a mature or old man to attempt to reproduce the athletic efforts of his college and school days. Most of the cases of heart failure in college have been discovered by effective examinations.

"Doctors should not permit persons who are physically crippled by bad hearts to undertake work or sports for which they are not competent."

Says Emotions Affect Heart

Dr. Robert H. Halsey, president of the American Heart Association, explained the intimate relationship existing between the emotions, the mind and certain types of heart disease. He said that emotions exert a powerful influence upon the heart action. Certain types of heart disease are the direct result of emotional and often mental instability, he said.

"When we reflect," Dr. Halsey said "on the powerful influence that mental conditions exercise on the action of the heart; on the changes affected in the rate thereof by anger, hatred, and revenge; by love, joy, or sorrow; by avarice and ambition, when we agree that functional derangement will terminate in organic disease, and that this functional derangement is daily and hourly produced by the activity of those feelings, then we are bound to believe that disorders of the circulation and the heart have increased of late years.

Dr. John Wyckoff, associate professor of medicine, New York University Medical School, discussed a particular type of disturbance in the heart less well known to the medical profession.

During a demonstration preceding the evening session, Dr. Arthur Grollman of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, explained the difference in the amount of blood flowing through the heart during disease and health. The afternoon sessions were held at Montefiore and Presbyterian hospitals.

Diversification on Farm As Cure for Unsoundness

J. S. McLean Tells Why Agricultural Policy Unsound

PERMIT EXPORT

TORONTO, Ont., Nov 3—(By the Canadian Press)—Canada's general agricultural policy would be unsound until production was sufficiently diversified to permit exports of surpluses, not only of meat but of animal products, declared J. S. McLean, Toronto, industrialist, addressing the Board of Trade Club, here last night.

The wheat policy of the country had proved unsound in 1929, he said. In that year, the Dominion had realized that the world didn't want all the wheat it could produce and that the world could not consume wheat at the rate Canada was dumping it on the world's market, he said.

PLANET IS PUT BEYOND PLUTO

Orbit of "P" is Plotted, Mass is 50 Times Mass of Earth

New York, Nov. 3—Working at computation in his tropical observatory in Jamaica, Professor William H. Pickering, America astronomer, has carried his search for new planets beyond the bounds of the known solar system to a point where he has started what he believes to be the immense orbit of a planet fifty times the mass of the earth and has made progress tracing the other elements in the course of his most recent work on a search which he has been carrying on for twenty years has been received by astronomers and other friends in this country.

The course of the gigantic planet, which he calls P, is now plotted with sufficient accuracy, Professor Pickering believes, that its discovery with a telescope stationed in the Southern Hemisphere will be merely a matter of a few nights until it will appear as a disc, instead of as a mere point of light such as that which finally was identified in March, 1930, as Pluto.

The announcement of many details concerning planet P was made publicly by Professor Pickering late in 1928. Seventeen years before, however, he had known that an immensely important heavenly body moved around the sun, far out beyond the planets already known.

The methods used by Professor Pickering in searching for Planet P are similar to those which he and the late Professor Percival Lowell used in plotting the size, orbit and position of Planet X, later dramatically fulfilled with the discovery of Pluto. They are similar also those which made astronomical history in search of Neptune.

The course of Neptune finally was plotted by the "perturbations" in the course of Uranus, which former it had been believed to be the outermost of the sun's family.

For years Professor Pickering has been studying still other perturbations in the orbit of Uranus and others of the outer planet until he believes he has found the location of Planet P with fair accuracy. Besides the planets, comets have been useful to the astronomer. The position of Jupiter was determined partly by means of a family of comets which evidently was under its influence. Similarly Professor Pickering has been studying the movements of sixteen comets which he believes are members of a family of at least fifty, traveling under the influence of P.

In an article published in Popular Astronomy last August, Professor Pickering disclosed that he had first reported that the object he was searching for was of great size from the number of this family of comets. He had intended that this plan t should be named Pluto when it finally was seen, but Planet X came into view meanwhile and "stole" the planet's name.

Planet P has an elliptical orbit, according to Professor Pickering's computations, and its distance from the Sun varies between 8,000,000,000 and 9,000,000,000 miles. In year, that is, the time it takes to make a circuit around the Sun, it has of our terrestrial years. It is third largest planet of the Solar system.

The two lesser planets, tentatively called S and T are still further out from the Sun and one of them is believed to have perturbed Uranus in 1924.

The population of the world is now estimated at 2,000,000,000,000. No man knows by keen-sight word of honor—except Gandhi.

On the Pacific Coast is a thorn line of more than 7,000 miles bordering waters enormously prolific of salmon and other fish.

Plans are being brought forth to form a Belleville and District Football League. Nothing definite has been done as yet, but Mr. Forman, of 331 Front St., is working on the organization. All interested should get in touch with him as soon as possible.

X—X—X

The hockey executive of the B.A.A.A. are quite busy these days making final arrangements before the practice season starts. Bill Rankin, Steve Meader and Harold Legate are the men who are responsible for the hockey in Belleville this season. These men have given freely of their time and finances in order that good hockey will be furnished the patrons this winter.

X—X—X

These men have gone so far as to bring a string of wrestlers to Belleville on November 19th. The proceeds of the evening's entertainment will go to the hockey club. The main attraction is confronces with Matchmaker Jack Corcoran, of the Queensbury Athletic Club, last night and he promised to bring eight wrestlers to Belleville for the show. This is the first appearance of the "rough and ready" artists in Belleville and judging by the crowds they have drawn in other towns it is thought that a full house will greet the show. The bouts will take place in the ring and seats will be placed around the ring.

X—X—X

No announcement has been made, as yet, just who the wrestlers will be, but Matchmaker Corcoran promised to bring some of the best men in Canada. It would be great if Lindsay and Peterboro had this professional debut in Belleville. The Big Four has decided to try the wrestling game as by figures that there is more money in it than hockey.

Last night's softball meeting brought a few new ideas to the front. One new idea is to be submitted to the league, they being sponsored by the Belleville Stores Ltd. With the remaining games this will give the Bay of Quinte league six teams next years.

The only permanent officers elected were Secretary-Treasurer W. B. Vandervoort. He was also made assistant scorer for the 1932 season.

A committee composed of Mr. J. Sheett, Judge Deroche, Mr. Wm. Neal and Mr. Vandervoort, Jr. ware Co. and Frank Deacon were appointed to draw up rules and they are to elect their own President.

X—X—X

Considerable controversy was heard at the meeting for next year but nothing definitely was settled about it. Probably at another meeting is to be called in the near future when the new executive may meet and draw up a new constition and by-laws.

It is estimated that the late Sir Thomas Lipton spent nearly $10,000,000 in his five challenges for the America's Cup. The City Hall Museum has received prizes trophy in all sports, tho' not including the trophy it won. It has never left the vaults of the New York Yacht Club.

A LONG SERVICE ENDED

"Uncle" Wilbert Robinson is through at Brooklyn. The man who has guided the Dodgers for seventeen years and who led them to one championship has finally been deposed and the baseball world enters at his passing. The veteran was a victim of circumstances and too much had been expected of him. While Ebbets ruled in Brooklyn, Robinson's position was secure, but the rise to power of the McKeevers spelled his doom. Robinson invariably got the best out of his athletes, but he never had an all-star team. Max Carey, former Pittsburgh outfielder has been named as Robinson's successor for one year only. Carey is in a slight situation. Brooklyn —fans are the most rabid in the major leagues, and will probably expect a little too much of Carey with the present array of so-called talent under his wing. "Uncle" may yet have the last laugh if he signs to manage hte Pittsburgh team. No more baseball from any angle you care to look at it. Barney Dreyfus thinks a whole lot of Wilbert, and hasn't hesitated to say so. It will be that he will lead the Pirates in the 1932 campaign.

Split Even in Athletic Events

Holloway Defeat Albert in Basketball But Lose in Swimming

In their opening basketball game played at the Albert College gymnasium last night, the Albert Tuttle team were defeated by the Holloway Street Church team by the score of 33 to 14. Stinfield was the big scorer for the winners while his team-mates gave him fine support. The game was fast and few penalties were imposed by Referee R. Carr.

After the game the visitors challenged the Albert boys to a few swimming events, to be held in the Albert College pool. The events included the 200 yard relay, 40 yard dash, style and the 40 yard back stroke. The Albert boys were successful in winning three of these events after which Chris Waring gave a demonstration of diving. At some later date a return evening's programme of sport will be played. The line-ups for the track ball game:

Albert—Hall, Waring, H. Sine, O. Sine, Morgan and Hobbs.

Varsity and Sea Fleas Play Single Schedule Count 4 Pts. for Win

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 3 (CP) — Adoption of a double schedule for the coming winter, with special exceptions for Varsity and National Sea Fleas, was approved yesterday at a meeting of the seven senior clubs in the Ontario Hockey Association.

Owing to objections raised by Varsity and Sea Fleas, it was decided these two clubs would play only half the regular schedule, counting four points for a win, the other clubs playing the complete schedule, count two points for a win.

Sea Fleas claimed it would take up too much of their players' time to travel out of town more than once in a season, and Varsity opposed the double schedule on the ground that it interfered with students' studies.

National Sea Fleas, Varsity, Marlborough, Kitchener, Hamilton, Niagara Falls and Port Colborne were represented at the meeting.

The first four teams at the conclusion of the schedule will play off for the championship, the first and third teams and the second and fourth clashing in the semi-final, it was decided.

The season will open earlier than in previous years. The official opening will be on Nov. 12, when Niagara Falls play at Port Colborne.

PASSENGER TRAINS CUT

Important Reductions to be Made This Month

MONTREAL Nov. 2.—Important reductions in passenger train service on the Canadian National Railways during the present month in the number of passenger trains operated, main line and branches both being affected, the cancellations and consolidations which have been decided upon in accordance with the company's policy of reducing expenses to meet diminished revenues.

Reductions in passenger train service have been proceeding progressively on the Canadian National Railways for two years and during the past summer one of the heaviest ever known, trains, the "Confederation", from Toronto to Vancouver, and the Ocean Limited was cancelled in the interests of economy. The train service cut to be effected about this month will reduce the passenger train miles run on the system by about 2,000,000 miles per annum, making a total reduction of 8,000,000 train miles per annum from the maximum of 1.29.

FATHER DIED 4 WEEKS AGO

Bereaved Son G. J. Huestis, Victim of Auto Crash

Picton, Nov. 3 (Special)—George J. Huestis, who was killed in a motor accident near Consecon on Monday, had been Collector of Customs here for the past ten years. He came here from Belleville where he was stationed for two years following his return from the Great War. He held several twenty years in the civil service.

About this month will reduce the passenger train service in the system by about 2,000,000 miles per annum, making a total reduction of 8,000,000 train miles per annum from the maximum of 1.29.

Mr. Huestis was a member of the Orange Lodge and this year was Deputy Master of Boulter L.O.L. 488. He served in the Great War and also in the Boer War. He was a member of Picton Post Canadian Legion. A valued member of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, he will be especially missed from the choir. At the anniversary supper of the church on Monday night he was to have been one of the soloists.

Expressions of regret at his tragic death were heard on all sides. He was very popular and will be greatly missed.

It is understood that the funeral will be held in St. Andrew's church on Wednesday if the body is released following the inquest Monday night at Cobourg. He is survived by Halifax, Nova Scotia, where he was born.

Less than four weeks ago his father a prominent insurance man in Halifax, passed away. Mr. Huestis was the only son. Mrs. H. J. Woodside of Toronto, whose husband, Major Woodside, met a tragic death, being overcome by carbon monoxide, is a sister of the victim and other sisters reside in Halifax.

Mr. Huestis had spent the week end in Whitby and was returning home when the accident occurred. East of Cobourg the car went into the ditch due to unknown causes, and hit a tree. Mr. Huestis was instantly killed, his skull being smashed. He also suffered internal wounds.

The car, a coupe, was owned by J. L. Ferguson, of Lindsay, and with him was his wife. Both these occupants were seriously hurt but will recover. Provincial Constable Ford fractured ribs.

An inquest was held Monday night. Rev. S. M. Scott of St. Andrew's Church, was in attendance.

COASTGUARDS MAP RUM NAVY

Officials Believe 'Racket' In Hands of Two Big Syndicates

Boston, Mass.—Tightening their cordon along the New England seaboard, United States coastguard officials now keep accurate records of the activities of rum-encompassing ramps of the fleet of "mother ships", list the vessels by their names, and keep in close touch with their movements.

Laden with more than 815,000, 000 worth of real liquor, the greatest rum armada in the history of American prohibition was ranging on the briny off the Atlantic coast last summer, coastguard records show. At that time the fleet was numbered at sixteen ships, the supply sources for the ship-to-shore runners from Provincetown and New Jersey, and in the islands off the Virginia segregated some more than 300,000 cases.

These boats are too big and too valuable to venture close to shore. They lie off the twelve-mile limit strategically situate to serve any market at a few hours' notice by radio.

Reports from coastguards show how these "mother ships" are to two at a time, moored in, forward the 12-mile limit, there to meet swarms of Rumrunner high speed boats who load up under the very noses of destroyers and patrol boats and then scurry for shore when darkness comes.

An instance of this was described by a guard of Base 18, at Woods Hole, a patrol boat had just reloaded to the base of 30 miles off Gay Head. It had located two Canadian rum boats surrounded by eight alleged fishing boats and one obvious speed boat.

Those two big rum boats, it was believed, had just come north from the rum fleet as they succeeded in unloading they would return to St. Pierre, off the southern tip of Newfoundland; whereas if they failed to discharge their cargo according to arrangements they would run back to the fleet and await another chance.

The Yankee ingenuity practiced by smugglers of revolutionary days was not a whit sharper than the stunts thought up by the Rum-runners who are known to be constantly plotting on Massachusetts shores. Fishermen ashore near the coastguard bases, and others aloft in slightly planes, by the hundreds men of the rum syndicates, the coastguard officials believe. An empty decoy boat leading in another boat with a load has proved to be the most successful stunt by which the rum-runners have consistently fooled the coastguard for a year or more. Alleged fishermen and speed boats at Boston, whose names or numbers convey prominent place names, "Provincetown" and "Cape Cod" have been taken along the coast or in the harbor, time and time again, with no stop or search for running at night without lights. Sometimes these boats are loaded in and sometimes heading out to sea and they were never searched nor pursuing. Why they should try to get away when they had no liquor aboard and why they should cheerfully face a fine and a loss of their boats for a load of liquor is considered peculiar. But the reason, as coastguards see it, is that the rum-runners grimmingly admit, is that the boats are empty when they are turned. While the patrol boat was bearing it into Boston Harbor to do the beam, the waiting boats came in with the load and landed.

Another stunt which was good two hundred years ago and still works perfectly is the "blind" boat for the skipper of a hard-pressed rum boat to drop over a barrel filled with rum and weighted light. The town that for a while and then rises it loose, puts out his own lights and goes about his business.

Patrol boat officers do not play this feature up in their cruise reports, however, and the rum-runners appear to be good sports for they do not keep about it.

So big and profitable has the "racket" became, in the opinion of officials here, and so efficiently is it now conducted, that there is little doubt that the whole business in New England waters at least, is pretty much in the hands of one or two syndicates.

What Theatrical Managers Say of Coming Attractions

At The Capitol

"SMART WOMEN" NOW AT THE CAPITOL

"The story's the thing"—especially when interpreted by such a capable array of talent as that in "Radio Pictures' "Smart Women," which opens a two-day run today at the Capitol.

That sums up Radio Pictures' latest film, a fast-moving comedy drama cleverly adapted from Arthur C. Pegan's stage play, "Nancy's Private Affair." It has to do with a disillusioned wife who has some smart ideas on how to bring hubby, who has fallen into the clutches—or clinches, back to the family hearthstone.

The well-known names appear in the cast—Mary Astor as the loving and domestic wife who gathers her bride into action when she learns her husband's love is at stake; Robert Ames opposite her; Edward Everett Horton in the hilarious role as a hypochondriac—similar to that he played in "The Nervous Wreck", popular stage play; Noel Francis, former Pollies star; Ruth Weston, John Halliday, Gladys Gale, Alfred Cross, Pearl Varvelle and Lillian Harmer.

Lavish sets of Georgian Colonial period, beautiful exterior settings and the latest in women's and men's modes and fashions form the background of this ultra-fashionable domestic drama.

The supporting programme includes comedy, cartoon and sport.

"FRIENDS AND LOVERS" AT THE CAPITOL

Four great talking picture players score in RKO Radio Pictures' drama "Friends and Lovers" opening today in the Capitol Theatre Thursday.

That, coupled with an excellent story by Maurice de Kobra, makes the programme well worth seeing according to advance reports.

Adolph Menjou, in the leading role, gives one of those dashing, debonair interpretations that distinguished him in such productions as "Grand Duchess and the Waiter", "The Sin of Madelon Claudet", "Gentleman of Paris," "His Private life," and "The Great Lover."

Lily Damita, opposite him is said to exhibit the glamorous, personable charm for which she is known. She imparts a greater reality to her role than she has ever done before.

Erich von Stroheim spices the production with one of the greatest bits of villainy he has been currently on the screen. The scenes wherein he and Menjou clash are particularly gripping. Mischa Auer is colorful...Von Stroheim at once fascinating and disturbing...cold-eyed...cruel...malignant: Menjou stalwart, debonair, gallant.

Laurence Olivier lately a sensation on the stages of London and New York, makes his film debut in Radio Pictures debut. His performance is highly praised by Capitol Theatre critics. Other members of the same company stamps him as a find.

REGENERATION STORY PROVES ENTERTAINING

"Shanghai Madness", which opened in a capacity audience at the Belle theatre last night, is destined to make a lot of noise in the cinema world for it is as fine a screen play as has been shown here in some time.

Based on an original story by Courtney Terrell, the former New York reporter, and featuring Joan Bennett and Hardie Albright, "Rich Money" digs down into the realm of the high class confidence men and exposes them.

It reveals how a group of well dressed lookers, brainy individuals devote their talents to fleecing wealthy visitors in New York City.

Their racket goes on unintercepted until there is a slight slip, and the whole gang are sentenced to lengthy terms.

One of the gang, a girl, an intimate tool of the racketeers, resolves to go straight on her release. A friendship with a fine fellow builds her up and that brings him and the gang again into contact from which a thrilling series of events ensue, not without someone paying a heavy penalty.

Joan Bennett as Janet Gordon takes the finest work of her screen career. Hardie Albright was splendid, and Owen Moore as the leader, C. Henry Gordon as his chief aid who later becomes his chief enemy, Myrna Loy, Douglas Cosgrave as the hard-boiled detective, Bruce Hall, Hughie White and little Ronald Cosby all aid in the general excellence of the screen play.

Three varied and entertaining short offerings preceded the exhibition of the feature program.

The entire program will be repeated again tonight, for the last time, to be followed tomorrow by, "Alexander Hamilton" and Doris Kenyon in "Alexander Hamilton."

GEORGE ARLISS COMES IN "ALEXANDER HAMILTON" DRAMA

Manager Forbes of the Belle Theatre announces tomorrow as the opening date for "Alexander Hamilton," the George Arliss production starring George Arliss This is a screen version of the phenomenally successfully stage play which was written by Mr. Arliss himself in collaboration with Mary Hamlin. The plays—Hamilton at the age of forty, and Hamilton at the age of youth, greatly contrasting to his earlier screen characterizations in which were all of old men—"Disraeli," "Old English," "The Millionaire." The play treats rather Hamilton's man, than Hamilton the statesman. That also accounts for period in his fiery life during which he fell under the spell of the alluring Mary Reynolds, is the basis of the piece.

Those featured are Doris Kenyon as Peggy Alan Mowbray, Rolfe Sedan, June Collyer, Charles Middleton, Montague Love, Lionel Belmore, Morgan Wallace, Gwendolin Logan, John T. Murray, Charles Evans, John Larkin, Evelyn Hall, Russell Simpson and James Durkin. John Adolfi directed

Alexander Hamilton is said to be the most flawless performance of George Arliss.

HUMAN BEINGS MOVE QUICKLY

What Rates of Velocity Are "Quicker Than Thought?"

Have you ever travelled at 200 miles per hour? asks Pearson's Weekly. Probably you would reply "No" to this question. But surprising as the fact seems through space at this speed many times a day. Science has proved that the normal human when getting up from sitting posture, raises himself at a speed of 200 miles per hour.

The human body makes several unsuspected speed records of this kind. What, for example, do we mean by "in the twinkling of an eye?" No one knows the speed at which one's eyelid blinks.

Few readers could say of hand that they have never noticed whether a cinematograph film depicts a movement of the eyelid of an actor, other than a deliberate wink. Actually, the film does record such a movement, because, generally, the action of the eyelid is a natural one.

Many flashlight photographs for press purposes, however, show a blurring of the eye. In that case although the shutter of the camera can work up to more than a 250th part of a second, the flicker of the eyelid is much faster, owing to the shock of the flash.

Speed of Thought

What, then, is the speed of thought? We invariably talk of speeds as being "quicker than thought." But are they? What does this mean in round figures? Accordibly to one Authority, the velocity with which impressions are transmitted to the nerves is about 112 feet per second—roughly 76 1-2 miles per hour.

Parts of our bodies are dying at the rate of 20,000,000 per second. They are blood corpuscles, and it is an established fact that we cannot move a finger, laugh, cough, laugh, or even think without thousands of them perishing.

The hyper boloid of the Big Ben is fourteen feet long, and weighs about two hundredweight. yet it travels a distance equal to 100 miles each year.

In contrast to the mechanical hand, the human hand has records of its own. We dig a hands at a rate of 100 miles per hour, and we raise a cup of tea at five miles an hour. Camera flashes his right to an opponent's jaw at 300 miles per hour.

Banjo Players Hand

Even a banjo player's right hand, which holds a plectrum and strikes the strings, moves at an astounding-ly fast rate. The speed is on a different plane, however, because in his case only wrist movement is brought into use and the "play" of his hand is barely four inches.

The average time lasts three minutes, but in so short a time he manages to cover a little over a twelfth of a mile.

A cow's tail swings at an enormous rate to-night away the pestering fly—and flies can travel too. It can keep space of a fox, whose maximum speed is proved to be 36 miles per hour, but hardly with a racehorse's 42 miles per hour, or with a greyhound at 30 miles per hour.

Money also "flies." A well-known English assurance company claims that, on an average for every eight hours working days during last year. It paid to its policy holders approximately £1 1d. every second, £165 every minute, or £9,961- every month.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov 3.—Clara Phillips, the 21-year-old married girl held for the razor murder of Mrs. Wallace Hoffman, made a new statement today charging the woman's husband with the crime.

Maddux, arrested and confronted with the girl's statement said it was a lie.

The girl said she lured Mrs. Maddux to a lonely woods last Thursday overcame her with ether, and left her unconscious. Then Maddux, she said, did what she had done, she said, and he went to the woods and killed 32-year old mother of three children by, cutting her throat with a razor.

EXPLORERS REPEAT TALES

Malay Boy Who Bounced Living "Fishballs" Recalled by Wells

New York, Nov. 3.—Bouncing fishballs, fishing tales and a gymphonic arrangement of howling dervishes were the features of a sensation at the Hotel McAlpin where members of the Explorers Club entertained their experiences at a luncheon given by the New York Exchange Club.

Among the speakers, fifteen of the thirty-three contributors to the book, "Tokl at the Explorers Club" were Major Chapman Andrews, Sir Hubert Wilkins, Captain Bob Bartlett, Carveth Wells, Gordon MacCreagh and Arthur Woods.

Carveth Wells, introduced as the man who "makes the fishes sound like a lie," opened the program with a Malay fishball trick in which the fish climbs ten feet into a tree after walking over the ground, winks its eye and takes a shower bath on the edge of a pool by flipping water over its back. "It is the only fish in the world that winks its eye and it is called the periophthalmus modestus," he declared. "That means I can do it."

"This ladies and gentlemen, let me tell you about these bouncing fishballs. I remember BUT well when I was out in the jungle there, coming to a large clearing which the Malays had made for planting Rice.

"The field was flooded with water and one day I saw a boy go out into this rice field with about twenty fishing rods. He stuck the rods all over the rice field and left the hooks dangling in the water in which the rice was growing."

Bounces Living Fish

The boy returned about fifty fish he declared, and when he started to bait he took out one fish and rubbed it on the ground. The fish was swallowing air and got round and tight like a tennis ball. "He bounced the fish on the ground and then put it into the air and he played around with it and when he finished he threw it back into the water. I squirted out the air and swam away again."

Mr. Andrews, the next speaker, switched in a Borneo forest. That the forest, he said, was better known by the sound of its insects than by the sight. He also told how he nearly walked into a python but was saved by an alert boy.

Captain Bartlett told how he obtained the aid of an Eskimo on the northeastern coast of Siberia. His dogs were in such bad shape, he said, that it was necessary to get another pair immediately. He attempted to trade with an Eskimo, and then striking on a plan, brought out a new Colt revolver. He let the boy shoot.

When he got back on the sledge the boy followed him with four. I saw the father leading the little white bear and asked what the price was said. I got the dog, the boy, the revolver and cartridges and on our way back we made four days' march. We now put him as leader."

Sir Hubert Wilkins told of his experiences with cannibals in the Torres Straits about two degrees from the Equator.

Shot Chained Elephant

Colonel MacCreagh told the members of the Exchange Club that he was once a business man—a foundry hunter for a taxidermist. He told of a young nobleman who had gone out to Burma to shoot an elephant, but later found out that the elephant was chained to a tree. It was rather expensive for the young nobleman, he added.

Anthony Fiala described some of the Arctic scenes which came to the ears of an explorer. In the Arctic the barking of dogs and in the jungle the howling monkeys are most impressive, he said. In each case he leaned a little closer to the microphone and gave a vocal imitation.

The air in Zululand is so clear that objects can be seen at a distance of seven miles by starlight.

CASTAWAYS ENJOY FILMS

Stranded Six Months On Island Delighted With Comforts

Aboard the funboat Sacramento in the Pacific—The three castaways rescued from Cocos Island, aboard the Sacramento bound for Balboa, attended the ship's movies lately and are delighted to get back in touch with the things of the world from which they were isolated for more than six months as a result of the wreck of their yawl West Wind.

While the three, Earl Palliser, Paul Sladwick and Gordon Brewster, have been besieged by questioners, they seem glad to talk to new people and are relishing hugely diversified aeoplane and bathing facilities tobacco and food, although not interested in pork and cocoanuts, the principal items of their menu for half the year.

A visit to Water Bay yesterday revealed their camp on a beautiful cove named for the famous English surgeon-pirate, Lionel Wafer, who sailed these waters a century and a half ago. A perfect crescent white beach bordered on the bay, with steep cliffs giving the protection which the trades required for sacking their treasure rising more than 1,000 feet on both sides and a 600-foot waterfall tumbling through the sun. Trees surrounding them were dotted with fluffy white birds, probably young boobies which from a distance look like strange flowers.

Shacks of Sheet Iron

Through a short valley back of the beach a fresh water creek rushed into the sea beside two old shacks crudely constructed of sheets of galvanized iron. Nearby was a diving board over a deep hole, where the men bathed, there being no alligators on the island. Here they mopped the dugout canoe they made, decompassable fresh and salt water bathing, runs on the beach, climbs and hunting kept them fit.

The larger shack sheltered a crude stove made of large stoves and at the rear was a kitchen garden containing beans and cantaloupe, surrounded by galvanized iron to keep out the wild pigs. Here also was a grove of almost 100 cocoanut palms, are bare, with hundreds of empty shells scattered on the ground. There also were lime, orange, lemon and coffee trees growing in the valley.

The men's diet was supplemented from the sea, which provided grouper, jack, turbot, lobster, crabs and oysters. They found many mosquitoes and beautiful birds, but no snakes or flies.

Pigeons, ducks and chickens, landed from the William Albrecht's yacht Camargo, which sighted the camp a week ago, for purposes of colonizing the island, were found taking shelter in the deserted camp and it is doubtful whether the chickens will survive.

Remove Memorials Covering Westminster Abbey Beauty

Cornewall Memorial is To Be Placed in Cloisters

BLOCK ENTRANCE

London (By Thos. T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent)—Westminster Abbey has often been called a poem in stone, but there are many people of discretion who think its poetic qualities are greatly marred by the lavish introduction, in comparatively recent years, of so much ponderous memorial sculpture. Now comes the announcement that the Cornewall Monument is to be removed from the Nave "to another position in the precincts of the Abbey." In other words the Cornewall Monument is to be put into the Cloisters.

Like many memorials erected in the Eighteenth or early nineteenth century, the Cornewall Monument has little except its size nowadays to recommend it. It was placed in the Abbey in 1776, to commemorate the action of Captain Cornewall of Toulon, Where it stands it completely hides the War Memorial Chapel which is near the Unknown Warrior's tomb, and those who wish to enter the Chapel must squeeze through an 18-inch opening. In place of the Monument there will be erected a fine screen of wrought-iron, in which will be incorporated the bronze sword and shield presented by the City of Verdun to the City of London in 1930.

There are many other memorials in the Abbey which could be removed without loss to the beauties of the Abbey itself. The Wolfe Memorial, for instance, is a ponderous piece of marble of little artistic merit. It represents the dying hero sinking into the arms of a grenadier, his right hand pressing his mortal wound. The grenadier is pointing out the Goddess of Fame hovering overhead, and in the background is a mourning Highlander. The inscription on the Monument is a very wordy one. In the Great War this Monument, so to speak, came to life. Canadian battalions, on leaving England for France, deposited their colors there. When the battalions, or rather what was left of them, returned from the War, they went again to the Abbey and reclaimed the colors; by perpetual use a couple of Canadian colors were presented a few years ago to hang for all time over Wolfe's Monument.

ART AS CHECK TO DELINQUENCY

Toronto, Nov. 3—Children's classes at the Art Gallery reached the peak of attendance last Saturday morning, when 523 eager young artists scattered themselves hastily over the building, from the Print Room to the Grange exhibits.

"We are receiving applications every day," said Fred Haines, the director, "and soon will not know where to put them all. When our staff of 30 is too hard pressed, we shall think of Judge Mott's declaration to the and make room for more."

"What declaration did Judge Mott make?"

"He said he court would be empty if boys and girls learned to use some of their energy in pictures, painting and art study. Art, he his judgment, is the best emotional outlet, and the boy or girl who enjoys using pencil, paint and other art mediums seldom gets into serious trouble."

BLAST IN FIELD BLOWS UP 2 MEN, ONE MAY DIE

Peter Leveck of Stoco Blinded, Mutilated by Blast in Field at Stoco

Engaged Blasting Boulders in Field of John E. Cassidy.

CASSIDY HURT

Condition of Leveck Now in Belleville Hospital, is Very Low

Peter Leveck, farmer of Hungerford township, was seriously injured in a dynamite blast late Tuesday afternoon on the farm of John Edmund Cassidy, one and one-half miles southeast of Stoco and Mr. Cassidy escaped injury. Mr. Leveck was rushed to Belleville hospital by Dr. Welsh, of Stirling, and attended by Dr. George Stobie. The left eye is destroyed, his face mutilated beyond recognition and his right eye is broken and there is little hope for his recovery. The man has not regained consciousness since the accident. Mr. Cassidy was not injured to any extent and he was removed to his uncle's home, being attended by Dr. Locke and Dr. Tweed.

The injured man and Cassidy were blasting boulders in the Cassidy field and had finished drilling a hole in a huge boulder on Carleton's farm. They placed the explosive in the hole and set fire to the fuse. Retreating to a place of safety they waited for a time; there was no explosion, and after a time they started back to examine the fuse. It was then that a charge of the entire charge upon the boulder Leveck was examining the fuse near and drill hole and Cassidy was looking over his shoulder. Suddenly there was an explosion and the men were blown off the rock. Leveck to some distance and Cassidy fell near his shoulder. After the latter had recovered from his shock he assisted the man who was in the dark across two fields and one road to the home of John Hayes, who lies across the road about one and one-half miles from the place of the accident. Mr. Cassidy told Mr. Hally what had happened and about the injured companion. Mr. Hally returned and a party went to the field to find Mr. Leveck. He was found covered with blood and blind, his face being shattered by rock and the force of the explosion and his leg broken, probably in the fall. He was carried to the nearby house and then after doctors decided his condition was very dangerous he was brought to Belleville hospital for treatment.

Cassidy, a young man, who lives alone, was taken to the home of his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Fleming profusely from wounds in the throat but the bleeding was stopped. His present condition is good.

Dr. Stobie of this city is in attendance on Leveck. Little hope is held out for his recovery. His condition was very poor this afternoon.

TONG WARFARE ON IN THE PEG

Gun Fire Breaks Stillness of Early Morning Hours

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 4.—Gunfire rudely broke in on the early morning stillness of Winnipeg's Chinatown today and Wong Sam, tea-shop proprietor, lay wounded in a darkened street. Companions who stood chattering with Wong Sam scattered when the shooting broke out and a revolver was found near the wounded man.

Police, after rushing Wong to the hospital where his condition was rated serious, believed that the shooting was the manifestation of ill-will among the factions of the Chinese quarter. Officials also found that Toy Wong, a friend of Wong Sam's, had been shot and was struck by flying bullets; they hoped he might identify the assailant.

BRIEF SPELL THUNDER HAIL

New Method of Weather Prognostication is Given

The rather late in the season thunder storm which passed over this district on last evening, bringing a short fall of hail in its wake, is presaged by local residents and storekeepers as an indication of warm weather to follow and gentle Winter ahead.

This is just another weather "fact" all modern meteorologists have to themselves of when asked as to what state of weather may be expected by the third Tuesday of next month, and if clipped out and hung away will hardly fail to be found at some later date when you too can sit at ease and claim a check mate to your grandchildren on your knee and make boastful remarks over prophecies.

This can also be arrived at by shaking three peas in a derby hat. The one that rolls the loudest does not count, but the one thrown over the right shoulder. If it rebounds in the air fog is sure to follow but if it falls to the ground "beware of a dark man with an axe" is his shoulder.

OPTIMISM IS RULING WEST MANAGER SAYS

When Buying Starts it Will Be in Avalanche, H. Sanders Says

STEADY INCREASE

Belleville Delegate To Hardware Convention Returns

During the course of an interview last night Mr. H. Sanders, sales manager of the local branch of the largest Lock Manufacturing company, who has returned from Winnipeg, and during the course of his travels visited Duluth, Minnesota, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Port Arthur and Fort William, Ontario, and many other points in his itinerary, stated that the startling point was the American Hardware convention, Chicago, many interesting facts pertinent to the present condition of business were divulged.

"While there is some hardship in the West," he stated, "it was only in the more sparsely populated districts. All the firms I have spoken to are very optimistic and a prevailing general feeling is that all branches of business is confidently expected to show a healthy increase in an enviable condition compared with certain districts in the east and on the American side of the line," he continued, "and I see nothing but renewed faith and continued prosperity in all lines, particularly our own.

"When buying does start again I expect we will have an avalanche as in all cases building generally starts with a boom and that will mean orders that we cannot expect to fulfill as fast as our customers will want them, as the local business conditions we are more than holding our own, with a steady but healthy increase in most lines.—Depression is a much overworked word which has done much to retard trade from the vocabulary."

Another interesting fact gained from him was a mention made to the effect that Duluth, supposedly the second largest port in the North American continent had ungotiable water rights and the construction of a union terminal for all rail roads providing the Water Ways Scheme is carried out. This will undoubtedly make Duluth one of the largest cities on the continent, and by its close proximity to Canada result very favorably towards this country.

Results of Job and Day Month Campaign Show

Mr. L. F. Green, manager of the Belleville Employment and Information Bureau, Campbell street, is much pleased with the results which are being obtained by the Provincial and General Unemployment Relief Committee in their "Give a man a job" publicity campaign. Direct results from this campaign are now being daily observed in the increased demand for help at the employment office. Heretofore the demand for men to do odd jobs has not been large and while a number there was has been spasmodic. On Monday eighteen men were employed with odd jobs in response to requests from citizens and on Tuesday sixteen men were put in the way of earning some money. No doubt the demand for help will greatly increase, when the citizens who have work to be done realize the urgent importance of giving their odd jobs to the men who are desperate for a day out of work. The work, which they have to do, appears to be plentiful and they do it themselves, thinking that it is not "worth while" calling in a man to do it for work, it is "worth while" and jobs of any kind, large or small, will be thankfully received by them. Mr. Green also states that applications for work at the Employment Bureau and for jobs offered there are many applicants. House wives should consider the names on the list when in search of help when at all possible. The money to be earned by performing even small jobs is urgently required by many men and women and a call to the Employment Bureau will quickly supply the names of many deserving men who are deserving of support in this way.

Sergeant as Esselwain Nine Years Secretary Regina Communists

JOINED IN 1921

Inner Workings Russian Influence Shown By Leopold

(By Jack Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 4—With eyes straight ahead, his red coat making a splash of color in the drab surroundings, Sergeant John Leopold, of the Royal Canadian Mounted unfolded an amazing story of intrigue at the trial of nine Communists here today on a charge of conspiracy and sedition.

Leopold, a N. W. Esselwain, testified that for nine years he had acted as secretary of the Regina, branch of the Canadian Communist party. During that period he had acted in an official capacity at various conventions. He told of the "Z" or underground party, and the "X" or aboveground party—and of events which led to the arrest of several leaders in one group.

He had been instructed in 1921, to obtain information against the Communist party in Western Canada. As a result, he joined the Regina branch and became secretary. He had corresponded with, talked with and acted with the various branch secretaries and leaders, all in search of evidence against them.

$2,000 from Moscow

Leopold said the Communist Internationale at Moscow, had supplied $2,000 in 1921, with which the Canadian movement could be started; and it was from this source that $600 or so further funds were forthcoming because he said, "Moscow felt the movement should be self-supporting."

The trial, which opened Monday, is that of Tim Buck, Tom Ewan, John Boychuk, Anne T. Hill, Malcolm L. Bruce, Samuel Cohen, Andrew Reporchin, Mike Golinski and Thomas Dade.

"The appearance of Leopold in the witness box was a surprise. For years the mounted policeman, according to his story, had participated in Communistic activities in the Regina district. He had several times visited Toronto to attend various conventions of the party. Leopold, a tall man, dropped out of sight of his former associates when his term in the force was up by clothing, acted and looked the part he played in the Communist party.

Recently, he prepared himself for the trial, by sorting and preparing documents he had collected, occupying those which the party had left behind him. Today he said he did not appear in the court room until he was called.

Surprise Sprung

Then, in the most hushed breeches and high boots, he made his way to the witness chair, and in a subdued suddenly whispered and started at him. In his low voice, he began answering questions put by Norman Somerville, K.C., prosecuting counsel for the crown. Mr. Justice, Wright, presiding on the bench, listened intently as the accumulation of notes he unfolded the story. To every question asked of him he had a ready answer, even though some of the questions involved months and years gone by—as far back as 1921 or 1922.

Raising of Wage Scale Problem Before League

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 4 (CP)— One of the most difficult problems faced by the International Labor Organization of the League of Nations is the raising of the wage scale, according to Dr. Joseph Shaw, spoke at McMaster Hall last evening.

"It was largely due to the efforts of the International Labor Organization," he declared, "that minimum wage scales had been raised upward. The same organization has been the cause of the setting of a seven hour day for miners in all coal producing countries.

Loincloth is The Only Dress

LONDON, Nov. 4.—(AP)— Mahatma Gandhi today was firm in his decision to wear his loincloth to Buckingham Palace to see the King.

"Would a poor man in the United States change his dress to see President Hoover?" he asked in answer to a question.

When it was suggested that a poor man in the United States might change his clothes to see the President if he had scarlet suit, Gandhi replied:

"Well, I'm a poor beggar and I have no clothes except my loincloth, which are all alike. Asked then to wear a dress or ride to the palace; he said: "If wishes were horses, beggars might ride, but I'm too poor to afford an automobile."

H. BRADSHAW LOSES RIGHT TO DRIVE CAR

Found Guilty of Criminal Negligence, Sentence Suspended

Harvey Bradshaw, Deseronto, was found guilty in County Court today before Judge Deroche on a charge of criminal negligence and was given a suspended sentence of Three years. This sentence was imposed on account of the man's age but Judge Deroche charged in the suspended sentence prohibiting the man from further driving a motor vehicle. The charge arose out of an accident, which happened in Deseronto in the early part of last year, when Mrs. Bradshaw was severely injured, when the motorcycle on which he was riding struck the car driven by Bradshaw, attempting to drive over the handlebars of the machine and breaking the pelvic bone.

At the time of the accident, Bradshaw is alleged to have been driving behind a large truck, turned out to pass the truck on the hill intending to turn left in front of the motorcycle, which was travelling in the opposite direction. Unable to get in behind the truck the motorcycle struck the front of the car driven by Bradshaw, a collapsible clear of the machine, W. S. Herrington, K.C., Deseronto conducted the defense, and B. Donnelly, County Attorney, acted for his prosecution.

ASK MINISTERS TO ASSIST IN WORK

The sub-committee of the civic unemployment relief met in the City Hall last evening. Mr. Illey, chairman of the employment committee, called the meeting to order and considerable business was transacted during the evening. The citizens will be called upon for clothing, shoes and food materials during the winter. It was also moved and seconded that the clergy of the city be asked to make a special announcement in the various churches at next Sunday's service, asking a great need for charity in Belleville.

1931 HEATON'S IS PUBLISHED

Handbook is Marvel of Condensed Reference Information

An important trade official of sound country, who is in a position to know, recently stated that Canada is lucky to have the most useful book of business reference of any country in the world. In their preface to Heaton's Handbook of Canada, 1931 edition, the publishers give their acknowledgments and authority to practically every department of the Dominion and Provincial Governments for their extraordinarily developed statistical services, and whole-hearted co-operation.

Heaton's Handbook has just been issued by the publishing house bearing its name, 245 Jarvis street, Toronto. It is a marvel of condensed information. It is in its most peculiarly handy form with limp cover and in spite of its 600 pages will fit into an overcoat pocket. For the student of the Canadian problem in Canada, or with Canada, it is practically an indispensable adjunct to the desk. The new Customs Tariff, is given in full with a very exhaustive and condensed subject index. and notes, intelligible to the layman. There is contained in this cyclopaedia of the resources of the country a mine of source information and production figures. There is a directory of leading manufacturers of Canada, by trade and province, a gazetteer of the principal cities and towns of Canada and a Market Factor section giving the figures, for analysis of Canadian markets, by provinces and principal towns. The lists, that the book contains, are in themselves worth many times the price ($3.50). There is a complete shipping guide with coloured maps, giving the railway connections from every post office and the country in which it is situated. Convenient digests of commercial law covering incorporation, partnership, negotiable financing, etc.—in fact, nearly all the information necessary to business generally that cannot be obtained from the Encyclopedia book.

Heaton's Handbook is an important contribution to business in this country. It is a real catalogue of Canada's assets in markets and productive industries with "directions for use". May the world make good use of it, particularly now.

the party was known as the "Workers". But in fact there were two organizations, the existence at all times. The first was the "legal" or "A" party, while the second was the "illegal" or "B" party. It was the latter, he testified which carried on the illegal work of "Communist Internationale" while the "A" party gave all the appearance of being a legitimate organization."

Two Parties

Originally, he had received a letter informing him that the two parties would be merged, and that the "B" party would come into the "open." He had been ordered to destroy the letter, but had copied it.

The Regina branch had been organized by Jack MacDonald, one-time leader of the party, he said, and its objects were "to organize the working class of Canada in an effort to overthrow existing institutional and social organisations in the country by the application of violence and force."

Moscow Pays Cost

Charles Boot, Louis Praina and Sam Kataysma, the latter a Japanese, had come to Canada from the Pan-American Bureau in the United States to assist in the organization of the party.

Original expenditures were defrayed from Moscow, Leopold said, but later the organization was self-supporting and the money was supplied through the Pan-American Bureau.

According to witness, Buck and Bruce were addressed as "Paul" and "Mason" respectively when they were in the "underground party." The secretary of the party was Trevor Maguire but he was known as "Howard". There was also a man know as "Stanley" but witness did not know his right name.

Before the trial commenced, two men were fined $25 by His Lordship for printing circulars calling a protest meeting of unemployed and Communists against the trial.

Leopold was still on the stand when the trial adjourned for lunch and will continue his testimony this afternoon.

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne Inducted as Vicar in an Impressive Ceremony

Ven. J. H. Coleman, Archdeacon of Kingston Officiates

MANY PRESENT

Rev. Canon A. F. Cecil Whalley Delivers Sermon

In a service of great reverence, dignity and beauty of ritual, the Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne was inducted into his incumbency as Vicar of St. Thomas' parish, Thursday evening by the Venerable J. H. Coleman, M. A., D. D., Archdeacon of Kingston, who officiated in the unavoidable absence, because of the Lord Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Reverend C. A. Seager, M. A., D. D., C. V. O. The impressive service opened with the long and stately procession of robed choristers and clergy approaching the chancel and sanctuary, singing the beautiful hymn:

Guide me O Thou great Jehovah
Pilgrim through this barren land
I am weak, but Thou art mighty;
Hold me by Thy powerful hand;
Bread of heaven,
Feed me till I want no more.

Read Mandate

Upon reaching the sanctuary the Archdeacon read the mandate from the Bishop sanctioning and ordering the induction service. He addressed the congregation in this impressive form as follows: "Dearly beloved in the Lord, forasmuch as our well beloved brother, Augustus Beauchamp Payne, hath been appointed and instituted into the Vicarage of Souls in this Parish by the Bishop of the diocese; and forasmuch as the Bishop hath given his Mandate to induct him into the Incumbency and Cure of the said parish, with all the rights and emoluments thereto belonging. And forasmuch as the charge of souls committed to him is a weighty a thing, let us join together in hearty prayer to our heavenly God, that he would vouchsafe his blessing upon his servant and the people committed to his charge."

Following this address the order of service was proceeded with until the place of induction was reached, when the Archdeacon addressed the vicar as follows: "By virtue of the mandate of the Lord Bishop, I do induct you into the real, actual and corporal possession of the Vicarage with all the rights, privileges and emoluments thereto belonging." The church wardens, Mr. H. A. Thomson and Mr. R. D. Wilson, then stood before the vicar and presented him with the keys of the church in the following presentation, as spoken by Mr. Thomson: "On behalf of this Parish, and in obedience to the mandate of the Bishop of the diocese, I present to you the keys of this church, in token that we acknowledge you as lawful incumbent of this Parish." The vicar received the keys and replied as follows: "I receive these keys at your hands, as the pledge of your recognition of me as your appointed Minister." The Archdeacon and Wardens then escorted the Vicar to his occasional seat.

Admonished as to Duties

Following this the clergy, lead in procession by the trucifer bearing the Font at the entrance to the church, the Lectern, Prayer Desk, Pulpit and Altar, at all of which stations the Vicar was admonished as to his duties regarding each. During the procession from station to station and after the last station was reached for the admonition pertaining thereto, the choir and congregation sang the hymn:

"We love the place, O God,
Wherein Thine honour dwells:
The joy of Thine abode
All earthly joy excels."

To all admonitions the vicar responded, "I will, in God, the Lord being my helper."

It was, indeed, a beautiful and impressive service and as occasion for its use seldom arises in the government of the church, it was followed with deep interest and devotion by the congregation.

The Sermon

The Rev. Canon A. F. Cecil Whalley, M. A., D.D., rector of St. Peter's Church, Brockville, was the special preacher of the occasion and he delivered an eloquent and earnest sermon dealing with the duty of the Vicar and his duty and the people committed to his care in things spiritual, their relationship one with the other in carrying on the work of the church generally. The text from which he spoke was part of the ninth verse of the twenty-first chapter of the Revelation of St. John the Divine: "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife."

Canon Whalley said that the Vicar, in the service of whose induction they were engaging was in close personal friend and he felt it to be a great honor in being invited to deliver the first sermon of important occasion. "At such a time as this," he said, "there must be a message for both priest and people and he recognized his great responsibility in assuming this duty and privilege. He spoke as a representative of Christ. The congregation as the whole church, as the "Lamb's wife," which is a relationship set up by God Himself."

"What then is the relation between Christ and His church and the priest and his people?" We are taught that Christ works through His body, which is the church and He has given to the church knowledge of His Divine will and purposes. The church's mind is through Christ in His service. Between the incumbent and people there should be mutual interests and understanding—they should know his need and inspire him to do his best and have affection for his people—should know their innermost lives; they should be closely related.

Mutual Confidence Needed

There must be mutual confidence which will allow no room for suspicion, because of loyalty and affection. "He sacrifices for you but you must sacrifice not for him, but for Christ, whom he represents. Sacrifice is the test of love. People criticise, but how many pray for their parish priest! His prayers for you every day and you should pray for him that he may be given wisdom, understanding and guidance, that he may really represent Christ."

He is here for the sole purpose of bringing you to the knowledge and the fulfillment of His Divine will—that you will be a glory of people, but the will and glory of God alone. The Vicar can not accomplish everything alone—the people must be missionaries and they must strive to do their part. "So you and he must give yourselves into God's care, to be guided by the Holy Spirit and I pray that in your life together God will bless you and him and that you may have a right judgment in all things."

The evening clergy were present at the service: Rev. B. F. Byers, Stirling; Rev. R. J. Cambridge, Napanee; Rev. R. W. Spencer, Canada; Rev. F. W. Ware, Marysburg; Rev. J. Brownlie, Wellington; Rev. W. Wright, Tweed; Rev. E. E. Taverner, Consecon; Rev. P. Heywood, Trenton; Rev. C. Peters, Picton; Rev. L. Greg, Bellevile and Captain A. Ayland of the Church Army.

ITALY CELEBRATES ARMISTICE DAY

ROME, Nov. 4—(AP)—Italy's eservice men celebrated the Italian armistice day today, one week ahead of the celebration in the rest of the world, by praying for their comrades who died in battle.

The reason for the advanced date of the Italian observance is that the end of the war for Italy came when Austria collapsed in 1918, a week before hostilities ceased on the western front. November 11 will also be a holiday in Italy. While the rest of the world celebrates the cessation of warfare on the western front, Italians will commemorate the victorious outbreak of the war.

KID TINY AND KID TINIER IN FISTIC BATTLE

Dempsey Scowl, Sharkey Sneer Apparent on Battlers

ONLOOKERS JOIN

Under ordinary circumstances this little story would have been passed on to our popular writer of sporting stuff of this paper, but he at present is out searing up the laziest dope on the list "trailers" who are coming to Belleville. Hence, we spread a good story.

The amateur feather weight championship of this city and district was definitely settled near as upon anyway on Frou! Street early last evening. The unpaid admission to this bout was very small and it looked to your correspondent as if it would have to be called off for lack of attendance. However, it was staged to a grudge fight with the boys and all thoughts of gate receipts were passed by in the personal animosity which existed between them.

As they stood glaring on each other just before the final bell, and the beginning of the battle, "Kid" Tiny, on the left, looked to be "in the pink of condition" his two foot and six inch tall body was clothed in a coat which hung to the ground and surged in waves about his feet. One foot was encased in a gaiter shoe, but in other pieces of what was once a mackinaw still could be seen. His hair which swept downward from an unopposed brow over his face finalized the regular realistic Dempsey scowl, and the chin muscles were in evidence.

"Kid Tinier, on the right, seemed to be in shade drawn by hard training but the muscles rippling under what could once have been safely called a sweater, gave one the impression that in inch or so he lacked in height and reach over his scowling opponent would be simply compensated for. Differing from Kid Tiny, he had a pair of shoes that were mates, but also a long pair of pants that almost obscured his feet and dragged strenuously past and below his heels.

When the final bell rang with a rap which almost concealed his sneer, Kid Tiny rushed to the attack and fighting spirit reflected therefrom.

No bitter recriminations here. Just two "men" setting to it as men should. There they stood, silent, alert, lost with sudden determination to have it over with. Kid Tiny feinted and led with his nose. A short body jab to the midriff by Kid Tiny completely came faze and Kid Tiny fell into Kid Tinier, quickly realizing the fact that he had his opponent groggy, attempted to greet his adversary by forcing to the floor body while Kid Tiny hung on grimly, determined to survive the bell. Suddenly realizing that the bell would not be rung for a minute a book some place, Kid—Tiny Kid Tinier—grabbed and tripped over his own coat and fell to the ground still embracing his pugnacious foe. Then came the end—a battle degenerated and was declared a draw, amid the jeers of the combatants. Gaining a half hour's start, your correspondent Kid Tiny slowly but surely forced him backwards and sideways until his head was nearly opposite a small pool of water left in the street by the recent rain. With a sudden effort he flopped his man over and face downwards into the puddle and miniature cascades of water flowed over his head in gurgling symphony, and it was not until the word "Uncle" had been mistaken

KING OF SWAT LONGS FOR FUN

Ruth Says He Will Quit Game and go on Spree for While

Los Angeles, Calif.—The Examiner in a copyrighted interview quotes Babe Ruth, the home run king, as believing he is playing a losing price for glory, "I can't go to movies," he said, "without people on a barnstorming visit. "It might affect my eyes. I haven't seen two shows in four years—and I love shows. I can't dance. They tell me it's bad for the legs. It's twenty five years since I waltzed. And a love to waltz.

"I can't attend a night club. They'd say I was drinking and carousing. I can't read a book on a train, for it's too hard on my eyes, and I spend most of my life on trains. I can't gamble. Not even a few dollars. And I love to roll dice, play faro, cards, bet on horses—anything. But if I was seen with gamblers or in gambling houses, it would start gossip.

"I can't travel on aeroplanes, but I love to. It's against the rules of baseball contracts or my insurance policies. Of everything I'm connected with, I can't shake hands promiscuously. It's dangerous—if they tell me I'm making too much money if anyone might shake hands. There's nothing I despise more than to refuse to shake hands with anyone.

"I can't go swimming. Because I'm told I would be exposing myself to colds. I have a sixteen-cylinder automobile, but I can't speed it. If I were hurt while speeding my wages would be stopped during my convalescence. I can't enjoy a round of golf because I'm followed from tee to tee by persons seeking my photograph. Hang it all, I can't do anything. Not just yet.

"But I will. In two more years I'll be through with baseball. Then I'm going to break loose—wide open. Not for long, but for a while."

OIL PRODUCTION OF ARGENTINA IS FAST INCREASING

Buenos Aires—Argentina may step into the class of the first ten nations of the world in oil production this year, it is indicated by figures showing production of 31,144,259 gallons for the first six months of 1931—an increase of production for the year of almost half a million gallons.

Its average production for the last five years has been under 972,000 gallons, but is steadily increasing, and many known petroleum deposits remain unexploited under state and national control. So far in 1931 almost as much oil has been produced under national exploitation as on private land, it is reported.

STATE WILL BUY HISTORIC CASTLE

The castle was built in the twelfth century and served as the "playhouse" of King William the Norman. It is to be kept his name, also, "held magnificent feasts and dances, and gave the neighborhood something to talk about, even in those days.

BOOZE RING IS INDICATED

Commissioner of Police Says Ring Must Be Stamped Out

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 3 (CP) — The Ottawa Citizen publishes the following today: "Provincial Police headquarters are convinced of the existence of a big ring of bootleggers operating in the Ottawa District and General V. A. C. Williams, Ontario Commissioner, has made up his mind that the gang shall be stamped out, even to the extent of calling almost an entirely new force in this district. That is the gist of an interview given by Gen. Williams to a citizen staff reporter who saw him in Toronto yesterday. To this end, it is also proposed that a conference of Federal and Provincial chiefs be held to decide on a plan of action."

"Gen. Williams said that during the past couple of weeks provincial police have captured many truck loads of liquor, but in most cases the drivers have escaped. Planes have also been reported in various localities, one last week at Niagara Falls, Ont., assisting in escaping capture. It was later picked up by United States authorities.

GANDHI CITES CREED IN LETTER TO GIRL

New York, N.Y.—Replying to a questionaire sent him by Miss Juliet Blume, manager of a local cosmetic production, Mahatma Gandhi states that what the Indian National Congress is aiming at is a "partnership or alliance." Gandhi interprets the status of a Dominion as follows:

"Dominions are generally English speaking peoples, they are otherwise called 'Daughter Nations.' India is in that sense an alien nation. Therefore, there can only be, ultimately be a partner or an ally."

In her letter to the Indian leader Miss Blume asked if Gandhi would not only agitate the term Dominion status, but also if he agreed with the definition of dominions made by Lord Balfour in 1926 as follows: "Autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, and in no way subordinate one to the other in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations."

This Gandhi described "as an admirable interpretation but what the Congress was aiming at."

Asked if he was sincere in statements attributed to the press despatches that "60,000,000 people, without liberty, cannot remain in the leashes of non-violence forever" Gandhi replied:

"The statement attributed to me in United States newspapers and quoted by you is the opposite of what I have repeated from thousands of platforms. Non-violence is an absolute creed. Violence is absolutely excluded from the congress voluntarily, because the congress has come to the conclusion that it is the right thing."

3 MEALS GIVEN HELPS POOR

Boys at Training School Send Truck Load of Food to Montreal

Montreal, Que.—(By The Canadian Press)—One hundred and fifty boys from the Shawbridge Boys' Farm and Training School, naturally hungry in the bracing atmosphere of the Laurentian Mountains of Quebec, voluntarily went without their meals during one week a short time ago with the result that a truck load of food was sent into Montreal to help feed the unemployed. The arrival of the truck at headquarters of the unemployment Relief Committee was a big surprise to the workers there who expressed their deep appreciation of the spirit of sacrifice and desire to help shown by the boys.

The boys at the school had seen by the papers that people in Montreal were having a hard time of it through unemployment, and that there were appeals being made for aided on: 60 lbs. beef, 50 lbs. peas dried on; 40 lbs. beef, 1 tin of corned beef, 3 bags potatoes, 1 bag turnips, 56 lbs. rice, 50 lbs. peas, 14 lbs. white sugar, 10 lbs. bacon, 1 bag carrots, 2 bags cabbage, 1 bag beets, 56 lbs. beans, 45 lbs. rolled oats, 1 bag flour, 14 lbs. brown sugar, and 6 bags of salt.

The boys who were quite keen about the contribution have asked that they be allowed to make a similar one in the near future.

Bird Transportation Causes Menace to Italy

Venice—Somebody in Austria recently felt sorry for the poor swallows, caught by winter too cruel to migrate to the south, and loaded them into aeroplanes bound for Italy, with the result that Italy is now feeling sorry for herself.

The swallows, kindhearted Austria seems to have given an idea to other parts of Central Europe, for many aeroplane loads of the swallows have followed the original shipment, and several residents are beginning to speak of the motorized flights as a "distinct menace."

HELD AT BAY BY WOLF IN STABLE

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Nov 4—James Thompson of Michipicoten Township, Manitoulin, reports that he was attacked by a wolf. When he heard what he believed to be a dog-fight near his barn, Thompson armed himself with a shot gun and with which to separate the combatants. He found his own dog and a wolf at death-grip. Separating the two, the dog left the scen of battle, and the wolf, Thompson says, made for him. Thompson shot the animal as it was nearing the animal, and then took refuge in a wagon, where the wolf held him at bay for some time.

RUBBER OUT OF ACETYLENE, SALT

Akron, Ohio, Nov. 3—Discovery of a process to make synthetic rubber out of acetylene gas and salt and water was announced to the Rubber Division of the American Chemical Society meeting here.

Three Dupont Company chemists explained the process in a scientific paper.

They stated that the synthetic material is not a substitute for natural rubber, but a compound which may be employed in some of the purposes for which rubber is used. The artificial substance is expected to find uses in some lines where natural rubber is not suitable.

For example, natural rubber is eaten by gasoline, but the paper stated that the new material is gasoline-resistant. The report was made by F. B. Downing, W. H. Carothers and Ira Williams.

C., Nov. 3.—An attempt to burn a school at Rossland, Doughboys and English - speaking pupils attended between the Thrums and Tarrys was frustrated last night by Edward Paul and a Doukhobor helper. Paul ignited the roof of the building on fire and climbing up, kicked away some burning waste and rags which had been saturated with oil. Damage was slight. The provincial police are investigating.

RAMMING WAS DELIBERATE

Master of Boat States He Was Well Outside 12 Mile Limit

Boston, Mass., Nov. 4—James A. Branzen, British vice-consul in Boston yesterday revealed that the master of the Canadian power boat, Sophie E. had told him his craft was deliberately rammed and sunk by the United States Coast Guard Patrol boat Harriet Lane.

Branzen said Captain James Sciiman of the 80-foot Canadian boat, told him his vessel was lying nineteen miles off the Massachusetts coast with a cargo of liquor and that he signaled to contact craft on shore attracted the coast guard boat, which bore down upon it and sank it. He pointed out, the viceconsul said, that he felt within his rights inasmuch as he was seven miles beyond the 13-mile limit.

Canada Has Interest in Fruit Industry

Manchester, Eng., Nov. 4—"Canada is intensely interested in Imperial consolidation," said Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner to Great Britain, when addressing a luncheon at the Imperial Fruit Show here yesterday.

"We are more hopeful than ever before," he continued, "of reaching some basis of commercial interchange, which would be of tremendous advantage to us all." The Imperial Fruit Show is a demonstration of what can be done toward the development of Imperial trade in the growth of the fruit industry Canada has a very active interest of the Old Country."

READING BUSINESS SIGNS

The press has of late been carrying news of a very significant character regarding an evident firming in business demand and growing attitude of optimism. Hopes are felt that the worst has been felt, and that improvement though it may be slow will be perceptible because the unusual burdens which have been oppressing the people for the past two and a half years have begun to lighten. There have been healthy reports of workmen taken on to work in various industries who had been laid off and of new undertakings. Experts read in this a change of sentiment and a loosening up of the frozen deposits of accumulated hoards which will soon turn into the well-worn channels of trade. Depression is at its worst as undesirable as a wild boom which pays no attention to values. People do not want either and are hoping that some day there will be a more delicate balance of business and trade which will be able to control the Niagara-like torrents of enthusiasm and blues which ever sweep across the face of the horizon.

When the turn is at hand, the steps back to normalcy will not be swift. The world must act as a convalescent would and take its exercise easily. Acceleration will follow when it should come. Rashness would spell disaster.

Signs are not lacking in Belleville that there is a little more than season-al activity in the air.

This does not mean that there can be any cessation of the work of relief or of effort to provide for a substantial future. The work of meeting the gigantic task of unemployment is yet to be done everywhere for the absorption of many idle men into occupations will take a long time. The months that have passed have been months to try the hearts of many folk out of work and their wives have been heroic in the face of odds. Only these people know what they have endured, this is not known to the outside world, but the workers on relief can gain a fair indication of the woods of those who are out of unemployment. This call rings in the ears of all citizens who can spare any money for the relief fund. As the descent was by degrees so the ascent towards prosperity must be by steps with increasing velocity until the cloud completely lifts.

NORMAL BUYING

President Hoover has urged normal buying by those who are employed. If his advice were followed there would undoubtedly be improvement which would affect not only every industry but increase the benefits the buyer is deriving.

It is a strange fact that few people buy when prices are going down but will buy advantageously. This is also true in the store as in the money markets of the world. This it is which brings furious declines in the latter. This it is which makes it difficult for men to get work, and which wipes out individual fortunes. Only when the human being will ever get clear of the tendency to run to extremes is yet to be shown.

A glance at the price of farm products and of goods generally shows how great has been the reduction in prices.

If there were normal buying, market bears and bulls would not have the opportunity such as they have at opposite ends of a market. Normal buying will, in the long run, solve the financial problems.

Canada does not have to make gold or strive to make it. She gets it out of her rocks with labor. Canadians ought to be proud of this hereditary treasure vault in the rocks. Now gold may not be shipped from Canada according to an order-in-council.

The rise in wheat a few days ago put millions in increased values upon the stocks of wheat stored up in the western continent. It is hoped that this means the emergence of agriculture from under the cloud of depression. If it does, it forms a good foundation for the superstructure of prosperity on this basic industry of the farm.

Some few Belleville boys misbehaved somewhat on Hallowe'en but most of them were young "gentlemen". The girls who masqueraded were as expected "ladies", and the honours are all even. Complaint has yet to be heard of the fair sex on Hallowe'en.

Many nations have declared in favor of an armament building holiday for one year in answer to the League of Nations' appeal for an expression of opinion. It is no sign of weakness today for a nation to come forward and say, "We want peace".

YEAR'S ENDING

By Aline Michaelis

Now that the year turns towards its ending,
Blood-time and seed-time through,
With gold and scarlet leaves descending,
Let me grieve, too.

Let me forget too much of longing,
Too many plans and hopes,
For bright are hosts of beauty thronging
Autumnal slopes.

Behind I leave the city's clamor
To dwindle to a sigh,
As down strange paths of dream and glamor
The year goes by.

I would forget the care and travail,
The haste of anxious ways,
No tangled skeins would I unravel
In these calm days.

Gone now desires beyond attaining,
Sweet, sweet, this joy life gives,
This beauty, though the year is waning,
That throbs and lives!

AS THE PRICE OF WHEAT ASCENDS so does the prosperity barometer, reminding us again that all real prosperity has its origin in the soil—"Destroy the farms and the grass will grow in your city streets," said William Jennings Bryan, candidate for the presidency of the United States, adding that the cities could be destroyed, only to spring up again like magic by reason of the agricultural wealth which creates cities, ships and railways.

ANOTHER THING TO CONSIDER in view of the highly chlorinated condition of the city water supply—how long can the bay water be depended upon for drinking purposes. Now even with an expensive filtration plant there is strong chlorination. Considerable sewage empties into the bay above the waterworks intake and as time goes on this situation will not improve, as long as it is permissible to turn sewage into navigable waters. For a really pure water supply for the city consideration may have to be given ere long to outside water supply like Oak Lake or Roblin's Lake or other source. Think it over.

WHEN A MAN is out of work and hungry and discouraged he can not be blamed for wondering why relief is not rushed quicker. Rushing a project sometimes tends to retard it finally. Belleville citizens are organizing as never before to help the unemployed and are cheerfully giving their time and means to help those who need help, but they are organizing for a whole winter's work, not just to relieve present need and that requires a business-like efficiency which can not be arranged for in a day. Then the provincial and federal governments which give dollar for dollar of money raised locally require absolute business-like procedure. As a matter of fact there is no need right now of anyone going hungry. Relief headquarters have been established in the City Hall and every case of need reported will be investigated at once and assistance given.

Other Papers' Opinions

HANDLING FIREARMS

A gun is an inanimate thing and is not endowed with reason. It works on simple mechanical principles. Once it is cocked, any pressure on the trigger releases the hammer and a spring forces it upon the nipple. If there is a load in the breech the gun is discharged, and anything in the line of fire receives the contents of the barrel. The pressure on the trigger need not come from a finger; it may be applied by a fence wire, twigs, or anything against which the gun is forced.

These simple mechanical principles are so learned. They are known to everyone who takes a gun into the bush. But the constantly lengthening chapter of fatal accidents indicates that disregard of them is fairly widespread.

Ontario is a sportsman's paradise. It offers many attractions to the sporting instinct. But often the day which opens brightly with the best of the hunt closes in the shadow of tragedy. Carelessness exacts its toll.

These unnecessary accidents will continue to happen as long as there are birds to be shot and animals to be hunted. It is only possible to reiterate the warning that every gun should be considered loaded until proved to be empty, and to remark that the muzzle of a gun is best kept pointed in a direction where a discharge might cause injury. The pleasure of the hunt is worth the precautions which may prevent the loss of life or the wrecking of a limb.—Toronto Telegram.

WORLD'S RIGHTS

There may be a depression in Canada but good old hard times are not discernible in Belleville. Some people, else who would dare suggest that the city water supply and reservoir should pay their share of taxation?

Do the lady students hop to the turnpikes and ride to their rights? They do not. With one voice they vote that men shall be denied even the privileges of paying the bills. It is all right for them to look after their independence, to do the work of men and to claim their intellectual equality, but they must refer to paying bills for entertainments, that's different. Such logic is simply beyond which no self-respecting man can go. As Secretary of the Treasury and you can only applaud her judgment.—Fenelon Falls Telegram.

A SYMBOL DISAPPEARS

The death of A. J. Cook ("Employer Cook," as he was styled recently in some circles) removes a picturesque figure from the prominent officials of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain with more than a million members, who have been the active advocacy of the strike and other revolutionary tactics. Cook has enjoyed a great influence over more radical elements in the ranks of labor.

To that element his death means a setback second only to the result of the general election. Cook was an out-and-out advocate of violent measures, and the general strike of 1926 was largely due to his activity. In Leninyard remains his written declaration: "To Lenin's teaching we owe the tremendous work begun by him. I shall devote all my energy to the study of the Great Hell the Soviets! Hail Revolution!" Cook was a picturesque figure in the advocacy of his violent views. Cook was a miner by earlier occupation. He was his nature. He stood as a symbol of physical action—although sometimes modified by the years—as distinguished from calm discussion by labor leaders. Whether such a symbol he passes from the scene means that the leaders of British people have set upon his methods the seal of their emphatic disapproval.—Toronto Globe.

DRIVERS AND DROWSINESS

The marvel of our motor filled roads is not the number of accidents that occur, but the degree of relative safety with which people drive.

Here, on a busy highway, are two large lines of traffic; ear following car in the same direction, each following car in the other, with only a few feet between the two traffic streams. If someone's steering gear breaks, and one car in the one current is thrown into conflict with the other, there is instant chaos, and probably loss of life. It is surprising how seldom this happens how few fatal crashes are in the metal to give way at the fateful moment. Or if someone is careless and over-eager, and drives out into the wrong traffic stream in the face of approaching cars—it does this, and if the gap in his own traffic allows it—somehow he will not let him back—once more there is confusion and danger and fatality. It is surprising, again how seldom this occurs.

Sometimes a driver suddenly die from natural causes. Sometimes he does, and the car rushes into unchecked as an engine of destruction. Sometimes a driver goes mad, may not die. He may sleep. There have been a number of cases of this in Canada, and one just recently in Western Ontario. It is a wonder the thing does not occur oftener, but if motorists exercise proper precautions it need not occur as often as it does. When a driver feels sleepy he should not drive. If he finds himself becoming drowsy at the wheel he should call someone else to the task, or drive off the road and sleep for a while.

The story is told of a traffic officer who found a man sleeping in a car in the roadway and suspected that he was intoxicated. Investigation showed, however, that he was not sleeping off a drunk, but that he had drawn up and gone to sleep because he realized that drowsiness would overcome him. That was a wise driver. The man who drives when he is sleepy is risking his own life and the lives of others as well.—Toronto Star.

Little Benny's Note Book

The fellows was out in front of my house last night and they come and ma came to the front door, and Mr. Herring had a automobile and I need them immeedtly, and when I say immeedtly I mean immeedtly, and I got in them the quickest kind of convenience.

And she went back in the house and I started to go around to the store, and just then the fellows started to see how many jumps they could do the street in, so I had to come down and get in it, taking a prilty long while on account of being a bit of argewment about it, and ma came to the door and says, Benny, I have told you once before you can't have your car, do you mean to say you have disobeyed me?

No mam, yes mam, I said, and I quite started to run around to the store like somebody breaking a record, and I got to the store by the way home with them I tried to see if I could do the alley to one jump landing on the edge of the cerb and having a fearse time to keep my bellerds, and all of a sudden I realized I was superior to them all my mine with both hands, and what was it but the hen of eggs, one thinking. Good lilts, heck, I wonder if anything happened to any of them.

I was able to make sure on account of not wanting to be too much interested in my own affairs, and when I set back to the house the fellows was holding on to it to see who could jump the highest strate up in the air, so I thought the bag of eggs was all the ism port and got in it, and ma was in the door eyein looking for mail for real, and I quick picked up the eggs and ran in with them, and ma grabbed a hold of my caller with both hands and started to shake me as if she thawt I was a rug with dust in it, giving me a prilty good shaking, I look out, I bet Bruce went and did something to my car.

And I opened the bag and looked in, saying, Mother smokes I was the, I bet you went and broke all them of them.

And maybe she did for all I knew, but anyways instead of making me her maid as I feared it prob her even madder at me, the rest being too sad to describe.

Today's Verse

PRESENCE

Between the pillars of the pine,
A lofty and a colossal nave,
Where light's rare shafts are blue and keen-line.
A few wind sends a singing stave.

It may be fancy yet I deem
There is a wonder in the wood—
As though each tree were in a dream
Or something holy as the rood.

It seems as though within this Were
Three immemorial confines.
There were a brooding sense of grace
As though God walked amid the pines.

Clinton Scollard.

Canada's present recorded watery resources are estimated to provide for a commercial installation of 18,000,000 h.p. The present installation of 6,125,912 h.p. represents only slightly more than 34 per cent of the recorded possibilities.

"Pack up Your Troubles — and Smile! Smile!! Smile!!"

The famous war-time marching chorus might well have served as the theme-song for the events in connection with McGill University's 1931 Convocation, as can best seen from the faces in the above group, which includes four distinguished Canadians granted honorary degrees of Doctor of Laws. Left to right: Sir Arthur Beatty, K.C., Chairman and President of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Chancellor of McGill, (third from right), seems to be the ringleader in the cheerfulness movement. It would be difficult to find a group more typical of Canadian stern-ness and fun look how that infectious smile has done its work! Left to right: F. W. McLennan, eminent Canadian mining engineer; A. C. Rutherford, Chancellor of the University of Alberta; Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada; Mr. Beatty; Dr. Harvey Smith and Sir Arthur Currie, President of McGill University. WOMAN DEAD WHEN THE CAR STRUCK RIVER

Doctor Gives Evidence at Postmortem Held On Mrs. Hisey

SKULL FRACTURED

Also States No Water Was Found in Lungs

Barrie, Nov. 4—That Mrs. Elizabeth Hisey, wealthy Midland woman, was dead when her car plunged into the Niagara River, in February last and that death was attributable to shock and hemorrhage of the brain, with a fracture of the skull at the base of the brain, was the evidence given yesterday by Dr. Harris Logan, of Niagara Falls, at the inquest into Robert J. Elliott and Gordon K. Clarke, charged with driving the car.

Dr. Logan performed the autopsy on February 19, the day after the fatal dive into the river of the car bearing Mrs. Hisey and driven by Gaslte.' The post-mortem was conducted fourteen hours after the woman's death. Describing her injuries, Dr. Logan said there was a jagged cut over the left eye, about three inches long and extending down to the bone of the nose. The left knee was torn exposing the knee cap and the thigh was fractured, a short distance above the knee.

The wound on the forehead reached the skull and had not revealed a congestion of the arteries, while at the lower end there was a fracture of the left side of the temporal bone, with a slight radiation. There was a fracture immediately below the cut.

"Death was due to shock and hemorrhage of the brain," testified Dr. Logan. "There was no water in the lungs, indicating that she wasn't drowned, and that she was dead before she struck the water. She certainly didn't breathe after striking the water."

Under cross-examination of C. W. Bell, K.C., counsel for Gaslte, Dr. Logan stated, in his opinion, it would have been a blunt instrument that had caused the head injuries.

"In the event of a violent impact, respiration might easily be so feeble as to be negligible?" was Mr. Bell's question.

"And that would be a time when you would get very little water in the lungs?" "If respiration had ceased altogether, it would not be possible for there to be water in the lungs."

Re-examined by Peter White, K.C., crown prosecutor, "The witness stated that had the car struck a tree in the right lung was of little consequence, not being more than a teaspoonful.

Dr. George B. Snyder, Niagara Falls, testified that Gaslte showed an abrasion on the face extending from the right cheek to the jaw on the right side, and about an inch wide. The right cheek bone was slightly lacerated. There were some contusions or bruises, on the same side of the head.

"He was in a very confused and excited condition," stated the witness, "He was incoherent and you couldn't tell what happened. His memory had apparently been affected. When I found him in the police station he could only say, 'Oh my, oh my! oh dear, oh dear,' and that he didn't know what happened' when he was questioned.

"I gave him half and a quarter grain of morphine to quiet him and took him to the hospital. He was somewhat improved the next morning, although still in a nervous condition. His memory appeared, lasting frequently."

by the Woman's Catholic League and the church, which in every respect was under the direction of the Picton Choir of St. Mary's. Dan Duffy is president. Over 100 were present the ladies being responsible for a very delicious lunch. The brilliant and beautiful lights in the commodious auditorium made a picture that will not soon be forgotten. The Kirwan Club is heavily indebted to St. Michael's Church for the wonderful arrangement, that the ladies' league were comfort and this was ably expressed by P. C. Macfarlane in giving a vote of thanks to the organization and to those, who by providing the splendid lunch the women were given many ideas as to what the ladies' league can do. Mr. President George Cole presided during the evening during the short intervals after which the gavel was turned over to Don Gullett, President of the Kirwan Club, who presided for the remainder of the evening. Bible Readings and Prayers were ably appointed song-leaders, while Edwardsky and Cole ably collected the several fines assessed.

Prizes Distributed

A number of prizes were distributed during the evening by Russ Wortworth for the best fines, the first being being the competition for husband-eating. The prize winner was requested to call her husband in her loudest tone and, the audience were to judge. Mrs. Jack Jackson, Picton was the winning person and received a beautiful bowl, the second prize "Bouncer" Bolway and Mrs. Bruce Bolway, Picton served and these prizes were bonored by the club, they being presented with favors, while the booby prize was a dish mop, this prize with which to keep their good wives in line, to be used in the home. Other prizes distributed were to Mrs. Bert Nicholson, Mrs. Mrs. Eugenia May, Mrs. Mrs. Lee Mrs. Mary Carley, Mrs. Vera Allen, Picton, Clarke Brothers, Winter Picton and Mrs. Bessie Palmateer, Picton. Mrs. Palmateer received a bowl of a delightful duet by Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, Picton, followed by an acrobatic turn by the Stewart Brothers. These midgets' showed dexterity of a high order in gymnastic feats and the audience threw coppers into the ring. Moments later, the boys reaping a nice harvest, at the conclusion of the entertainment, Queens' Bon Ton Orchestra supplied the dance music and the assembly wearing all sorts of paper hats and with streamers to throw, made a very light fantastic to the early hours.

CHAMBER AS HOSTS

ing the Australian delegates. Mr. Waite explained that this enterprise of sending good-will delegates to Australia on a mission was one with gigantic possibilities.

Hope to Welcome

Mayor Reid was called upon officially to welcome the visitors to Belleville. His Worship said that this was one of the greatest meetings in the city's history and after explaining the wonderful farming facilities in Australia, he hoped to be able to officially welcomed them on behalf of the City of Belleville. The mayor expressed his regret that the delegates' visit was not longer.

Alexander Illsley of the Chamber of Commerce was delighted that the delegates were visiting Belleville and that they would be able to tell their friends across the water about the wonderful country in which they live. He was sure that the delegates' visit would be a success, said Mr. Laffer, in referring to Australia's "Buy British" campaign. He said that the youngest British country was that it was due to the Commonwealth's fiscal policy. Mr. Laffer said this day was won. In closing Mr. Illsley lauded the imperial trade treaty.

Impressive Country

Mr. H. E. Laffer was the first of the delegates to speak and he was on rising he expressed his appreciation for the splendid hospitality that had been bestowed upon him in Canada. The greetings extended to the Australian and New Zealand delegates was a symbol of their goodwill towards the great enterprise that was being started, the speaker said. The Empire Exhibition, he said, was a success, said Mr. Laffer, in referring to Australia's "Buy British" campaign. He said that was the youngest British country and that it was due to the untiring efforts of their pioneer settlers that Australia was now looked upon as one of the most important nations of the world. "Australia is a country as large as Canada in square miles, but, is larger in population by 2,000,000 souls," said the speaker. Australia is 3,000 miles long and 2,000 miles wide and embraces all the temperate climate to within 500 miles' of the equator. Mr. Laffer said that Australia's climate enables Australians to produce products of the soil of many different countries.

He pointed out that the development of Australia was only started about 30 years ago and that no country could show greater strides in progress and marked development than Australia in that period. The start of inland waters is the great drawback in developing the interior of the country, but this was somewhat overcome by the development of roads and railways. Australia's railroads are of the same gauge as Canada's and the transcontinental railway is brought a better class of people from the British Isles. After the gold smash rush out the settlers were forced to open up the country for, agricultural purposes and it was then that the government that there was wealth also in the products of Australia's fields and soil. In place of the old time horse and plough, the huge wheat and sheep ranches in Australia had to be farmed there was a lack of rainfall, which amounts to about only eight to ten inches per year, but this difficulty is overcome by the numerous underground streams that are to be found in these districts. These are the sources of irrigation for the country and with the help of science Mr. Laffer thought that before many years Australia would be one of the greatest agricultural countries in the world.

Varied Climate

The varied climates that exist in the country being responsible for ranging from temperate climate fruits, such as grown in America and Europe, to the tropical fruits like bananas, oranges, pineapples and peaches. These have in the past few years they have developed and canning industries would be to meet the demands and can now export it to the outside world. Wines, such as are made in the south of France, Portugal, are now being manufactured in Australia and are the best products are in our country," stated Mr. Crutchley. "Australia is the leading producer to be imported from Australia is dried fruits, canned and dried fruits have leaped 200 per cent. in the last five years. The speaker assured the meeting that their canned goods could go into Canada would not conflict with the Canadian canned goods, this also was assured in the better class of fruits that are grown in the port vast quantities of raw sugar returning that product as an Empire made right be the result, Mr. Laffer concluded.

"Let us look at Australia today," said the speaker. He then went to the Empire, that the British Empire would come into His own and become the commonwealth trade centre of the world. "Australia is on the upward trend-and with its vast resources of Canada and Australia, the depression of 1930 and 1931 will be forgotten in a short time," said Mr. Laffer.

Conclusion

In conclusion, Mr. Laffer said that he would like to see both Canada and Australia benefit. Before he was assured that with a trade treaty with the British Empire would come into His own and become the commonwealth trade centre of the world. "Australia is on the upward trend-and with its vast resources of Canada and Australia, the depression of 1930 and 1931 will be forgotten in a short time," said Mr. Laffer.

C. R. Critchley

C. R. Critchley, assistant trade commissioner of Australia, was the next speaker. He said that Mr. Critchley is a young man and impressed the meeting with his optimistic view of the future. After expressing his sincere appreciation and a welcome extended to him in Canada Mr. Critchley at once referred to the trade treaty between Canada and Australia made in 1924. He said that although the late Sir Robert Borden had approached on the subject and they had gone to Australia in 1925 that the countrymen had not taken the mat-

OUTLAWS OF EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

INSTALMENT IX

When Silas Babson returned to Derby Center he brought with him three legal documents, all undated. One was a petition to the county board of supervisors for permission to form the Forkorn Valley Irrigation District; another was a formal application to the State Water Commission requesting the allocation to the Forkorn Valley Irrigation District of the flood or freshet waters of Eden Valley Creek; the third was the articles of incorporation of the district.

The attorney he had consulted, Messrs. Brooks, Egan and Brooks, had agreed with him that, under the circumstances, his strategy was excellent, but had taken occasion to warn him that if Nathan Tichenor and Lorraine Kershaw should decide to oppose his proposition seriously he would certainly have a fight on his hands before he got through with them.

Under legislation recently enacted a State Water Commission had been appointed and this commission has control of the so-called unappropriated waters in all the streams in this state. There are, undoubtedly billions of gallons of so-called unappropriated water in Eden Valley Creek, and there is no doubt that the State Water Commission will grant the petition of the Forkorn Valley Irrigation District for the allocation to it of these so-called unappropriated waters.

"As I understand your situation, if you can get your machinery in operation to enlarge a condemnation suit before Tichenor sells his dam-site to this power company you suspect of having an interest in it, you'll better the Kershaw girl with her lake-site to the same power company, you will, by the filing of this suit, automatically ruin the aspirations of your competitor, and you may safely accept my assurance that you can win such a condemnation suit. However, what the proposed irrigation district will have to pay Tichenor and Miss Kershaw for these properties, is a mystery. A matter for a jury to decide. Your irrigation district will have to pay the price within thirty days or forfeit forever its right to acquire the bonds."

Babson nodded his comprehension and the attorney continued: "Your first choice of an impounding dam is now owned by Tichenor and the lake-site by Miss Kershaw. If these properties are sold to the power company, being a public service utility, cannot be disturbed in the possession by another similar corporation. You understand that point clearly?"

Again Babson nodded.

"We will assume that this is exactly what will come to pass. You will understand that in that event the power company will occupy, it will not have to purchase or condemn any water rights from Tichenor and Miss Kershaw. The water will pass over their ranch lands just as it has been passing for centuries, and the power company will occupy it with no right

FINANCIAL NEWS

HIGHER LEVELS GIVEN SETBACK

Oils and Copper Pulled Market Out of Mild Slump

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 4.—The securities markets displayed a firmer inclination toward higher levels today, despite a morning setback in shares.

Oils and coppers pulled the stock list out of a mild slump after midday.

In shares, rails and five miscellaneous industrials weakened after a higher opening. Railway remained under pressure but morning losses of a point or two in such industrials as American Tobacco, American Can, Allied Chemical and Johns Manville were soon recovered. U.S. Steel held fairly steady. In the afternoon gains of 1 to 3 points were scored by Consolidated Gas and American Smelting and Certain Teed products moved irregularly fractionally. Phillips rising a full point. Trading was in light volume. Yard closing average jumped 9 points.

Speculative quarters showed some disappointment over the news that the interests controlling Canadian Railways had declined to acquisence in a proposed voluntary wage reduction of 10 per cent. but the decision of the heads of the American Railway Presidents Conference to give railway executives a conference to discuss wages in connection with unemployment was regarded as encouraging evidence of a conciliatory attitude.

The manner in which the wheat market has withstood the most intensive profit taking was regarded by Wall Street as highly cheering. Strength of the oils was a further reflection of the favorable trade prices in the mid-continent fields, buying of the Coppers led to considerable speculation as to the conversations between leading world producers in New York to discuss measures of stabilizing the industry. Nothing definite however, have been in small group, and have been closely guarded.

Letters to The Editor

Belleville, Ont., Nov. 3, 1931.
Editor of Ontario-Intelligencer:

I notice a letter in your issue of date re the esplanade, and as a taxpayer of the City of Belleville, would like to express some of my feelings in connection with this proposed park project.

I notice the writer of the article is a heavy taxpayer on front street (west side), having property directly abutting against this proposed park but naturally he did not tell you his property would be more valuable, and that out of the investment proposed he was only to be assessed directly against his property a portion of $5500.00, which was all that the property owners directly abutting the new street was to bear, the remaining portion of $185,500.00 was to be taxed over the taxable property of the City of Belleville, a very good reason why the property owners on front street favor this proposition go through. Regarding the Canadian National Exhibition I notice the writer was particularly interested. What about last year, only a few years ago water mains were laid under the relief plan and before the end of winter half the city's debentures debt he seems at the present time to forget. The citizens that this project was not in have first-hand knowledge. Up to date he forgets or probably is not conversant with the particulars to know that the City of Belleville is a position to start in one month, providing all parties agree to be free, and with legal entanglements. The question of factory notices probably a great deal longer, and then not definite. I am asking him if he thinks that the City should not do the citizens' business as an alderman? I am not a believer in favor of something that no one could of the definite cost of.

The writer claims that the right-of-way can never be obtained again at the price offered. I am not agree with the writer because the property owners on the west side of Front street is got going to have a proposition aside that increases the value of his property when the larger portion of cost is being paid by the citizens of Belleville. The council of the last year had the cost of Front street paved two streets, built filtration plant and laid new mains of the

Children and Your Sense of Values

By Constance Cameron

There probably is no mother who doesn't at some time or other regret for the neatness and quiet order which reigned in her home before the arrival of her children. For that she'd trade the children for more neatness, Mr. C.? Not she, but she'd sort of like both.

Well, in the average home of 1931 it is rather hard to combine the two. The old fashioned parent —with shaking attire to romp in, big yards inviting play and several extra rooms—were ideal for the rearing of children. But in the cramped apartments of today, where in many cases the child can not have a playroom of his own, the mother must sit down and fight out with him a more personal battle—her child's growth, his development, his character and temperament through play, or a tidy spic and span abode.

Is there any possible means to give the child his own room for play, and the child his own room for rest? But even with a play corner there are times when play periods are too big not to spread over into the living room.

A mother scolded and swiftly broke up an interesting play period recently when, coming into the living room, she discovered that the children had transformed it into a clean sheet held up by two footstools, in which the three little children excitedly crossing the Am- in the same spots!

Parents' Attitude Toward School

By Constance Cameron

There are many reasons why a child may dislike school and although them possibly a teacher who has gone sour on her job, or the fact that the child is in a grade which is too hard or too easy. But the factor which is thinking today is the attitude of the parents toward school.

The usual situation in a home where the child is starting his initial entrance into school life is that the child himself looks forward to the event with a thrill, picture, a new experience a new world to be explored, and the wise parent will foster this idea not only for the first days of school but during the child's entire school life. But mother and father, perhaps unthinkingly, set up an adverse reaction to school then wither why the child resents school, "hates school," and leaves each morning tearfully resentful.

The mother who wants a child: "When you get in school you don't have—" builds a picture of school with correctional institution which at best, cannot look inviting to the child.

The parent who, when Jimmie says, "Aw, arithmetic is a cinch," retorts: "You just wait, you'll find it's not so easy," is building up fear and dread of further experiences in mathematics.

And it is so simple to keep up the little child's original enthusiasm and interest if we just think about it and try a little. Praise for schoolwork well done, help with the subjects not quite so well done, plenty of materials at home with which to work out play projects which carry school ideas into home life—all these are within the reach of every mother and father.

Don't dampen your child's ardor for school, for he has that ardor when he begins. If it is impaired by wrong teachers or wrong handling, talk things over with the teacher with the view of helping her understand the individual child. However, abner resolutely refuse to remarks which implies the child with the fact that education is compulsory, or hardship, or just one of those awful things we all had to go through. Rather can it be kept a glorious adventure if you approach it as such and, if your child is one of the legion who "hates school," look first at yourself and see whether you haven't in some way set up this unfortunate reaction.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Follett

Eyebrows are normal again, love by silky semicolons instead of faint narrow parentheses. But for real beauty par, they should harmonize with the shape of the eye, be dark glossy and lustrous with no tradly hairs hanging around the outskirts. Some eyebrows haven't nice traffic thythe bristle, brushing with petty tiquating will curb their wild natures. Eyebrows growing in going on as a brisk pace, two straight lines remains strong for several months, and the massive box can be chucked. Eyelashes, too are given a coating from the dye pot. Must be carefully applied.

Spring ensemble are about come for, the hair growing out from the scalp at the rate of one inch every four months, making the undulation to recede. The marcel line is now on straight locks with no damage done to the structure of the hair even if the waved portion is undulated. Upturned ends at the nape, or the neck fill in the space where the wavy hair left off.

We urge the sisterhood to look upon the spiked heel for what it is, a torture device, which makes good posture impossible, that throws the body forward, and the pelvic, cupied by the combined Eng lish curved projection of the abdomen, upset. It is expected that another seat will be found for the Attorney-General.

Fashion Fancies

By Alice Alden

A hardy annual is the Autumn coat of black woollen or cloth with Persian lamb. A new version of this theme is done in a dolman coat in black corduroy woollen. It has a wide notched collar and elbow length gauntlet cuffs of fine black Persian lamb.

A change from some of the new hats is an exquisite taupe of black satin worn off the forehead at the right eye. On either side there are two white feather fantasies that curve behind the ear and sweep forward over each shoulder. This hat will be much copied; as it is lovely.

A night shade that is new is pale opalescent mauve pink, very flattering to all types. It is used for a satin gown of the new trains has just high waistline emphasized by scarf belt that oculpes the neckline and then come down and tie around the figure.

It needn't be the quite long length in some time. One of the nicest of the new wraps is just three quarter length satin with a yoke of fine black broadtail. This yoke is applied in encrusted points.

Why not a suit of black woollen to wear right through the Autumn, Winter and Spring? A black woollen with a belted long coat to set off a softly cushed collar of white caracul edged with the slightest line. There is of course, a white satin blouse.

A true aristocrat among furs is mink and we are glad that it is coming back for coat trim ming. A new coat of dark brown broadtail with mink collar cut in great revers in front and huge, deep length gauntlet cuffs of the same rich brown fur.

Still with the combination of black and white. A simple but charming dress of fine black woollen onto the leather belt at the waist. The cuffs, almost to the elbow, are also of the white faille. The hat is a crepe satin to cover with fine jet backet this season.

Fur trimmed coats will be many outfits. For instance, a white cashmere coat can be worn with a black woollen frock or with a black woollen skirt and a white blouse.

The fox wanders in divers ways on many of the new coats. A coat of grey orange tweed, has a huge collar of red fox that crosses over the chest belt, and hangs down carelessly over the back.

It must be new otherwise the handbag will spoil your Autumn ensemble. A morocco purse with there is a bag of black grosgrain with a silver top, a wide strap and cut steel beads. There is a frame of marcasite and cut steel.

An ensemble from the east is to be observed in black velvet with licorice jewelry. Quite Persian is a black velvet coat with a wide shawl collar of gold. There is a tiny peasant model in the lace network in front and a large lapis lazuli stone on either side.

A pleasant rest from pyjamas is indicated by the return to popularity of the nightgown. A new model has a high crepe and has intricate seaming to give a svelte line. There is a deep flounce and the bodice is of real Alencon lace.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beckman

What to Order

Dear Mrs. Beckman:

I, I am always puzzled as to what to order when I am in a restaurant with a man friend. It is embarrassed to order a large meal for myself and then for dinner after a show. Also, how can I tell how much his pocket book holds? I hate to cause him extra embarrassment and yet it causes me great embarrassment in trying to decide on a general dinner. I don't eat much and it seems very ill bred to order a large dinner and not eat all of it, although I hate to hurt the waiter's feelings by sending food back. I wonder why it would not be correct for the young man to order?

2. When eating out is it the custom for the girl to suggest leaving when she sees both are finished?

3. When walking down the street with a man, is it proper for a girl to hold his arm? To me it looks as if the girl is unable to walk alone. There has been an argument between my sister and myself. Anxious.

Answers.

1. Your first question, dear girl, is a question that has worried and bothered girls from I suppose, the time when the first gentleman asked the first lady to dine with him. Embarrassed, they have ever been to it lies in the common sense, kind gracious and tactful consideration of the girl. This, I feel sure, would be the requirement must be acquired through sensitiveness to other people and to social life in general. As in all other elements in life, we must learn moderation and must learn the glorious value of directness.

In the first place, the weight of foolishness, to order what you do not want. Never mind what other girls do—such a procedure hardly rates high in the scale of proportion. If you are a light eater, order what you want. If you are a hearty eater, be more delicate to modify your order. Certainly one should not order a full dinner when a light supper will be appropriate for the occasion. A "general dinner" is inappropriate after the theatre.

Never, as a matter of fact, has it been easier for girls to solve their problems than today. This is at this time. To begin with, people are not taking as much food as they ever they did. And so many people have definite preferences, that we now have the social privilege of ordering to wish, and have as we wish, without the thought that any one will even think about it. Consideration of pocket books.

Also one should never leave the ordering to the young man—this is not fair, especially as he pays for you, but certainly not for him. Consult with a generous spirit.

2. The young man will wait for this suggestion from the woman.

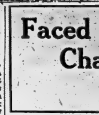
3. Walking arm in arm is proper. They should walk independently. Only old people, not "dropped" on each other.

Beatrice Fairfax Letters

They Should Write First

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have become engaged to a young man whose home is far away. Consequently I have never met his parents. The other day my fiance received a letter from them saying that they expected to come here soon. They would you suggest that I write? Josh.



Usually the parents of the fiance write to the girl a friendly letter of welcome and you should answer this letter. Any reliance that you expect this attention from his parents, should be very nice and gracious on your part if you do not receive this formality and write to them. Say that they have written you and tell about them that you feel you know them all very well and are looking forward to meeting them.

Sister Probably Knows

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 23, and have been going with a fellow of 31 for three years. I am living with my married sister and her children and friend, so I go with him unknown to her. He treats me wonderfully. He has my mother's consent. I had been going with him and said, if I continued to do so, I would never hear Sheikatrix, Ky.

Faced Burglary Charges Before Grand Jury

Faint Print Traced Him

One night last October a young man broke into a jewellery store in Norwich, Conn. He had broken into other stores and escaped the police. He was given to leave no trace. He would break a windowpane, then turn the catch and raise the window.

This time he received a slight cut him from the glass and took off his glove to examine it. Then he made a slip as all criminals do. He forgot and touched stone with the cut finger. The Police found the faint print and traced it to Jones. Jones was at his trial before the grand jury. His prints betrayed him.

Prints on Food—Danger!

Your finger prints are dangerous to you too. The criminals are not alone, of course you do not commit any, but because of the disease germs your fingers leave on food as you eat it. There is the danger. These germs you have picked up from things that other people have touched with hands that perhaps checked a cough or sneeze. Colds and flu germs are transmitted most commonly this way. Life Extension Institute lists 27 diseases which may be transmitted through the hands.

That is the way your prints are dangerous to you. Through germs. They are about mouths, on a cigarette, a biscuit, a fruit—and if you are careful you may afford some safety in.

Safe With Lifebuoy

Germs are everywhere but a way to safety is by killing or making dormant such germs as you touch. Lifebuoy washing—always before a meal—with its strong suds made for this purpose will do it. That one soap is Lifebuoy. It is entirely harmless.

It is made from rare palm oils that have wonderful value as a skin tonic and beautifier. No soap made anywhere can do more for your complexion than Lifebuoy.

Safety from germs and health for your skin, with Lifebuoy, yet you pay no more for it than for an ordinary toilet soap. Keep a cake of Lifebuoy in the bath house and for the bath. TO THE NEW HOUSE

From friends and neighbors come, a kindly crowd,
And say, "With this new house you must feel proud."
They scarcely understand. They cannot know
That you were new to me long ago.
Each painted wall, each vista that appears,
But brings to light a picture held for years,
The building was like setting down
That rang within my heart and mind.
I saw you, through spring rain and summer sun,
Before the sound of hammers had begun.
Before your sheltering walls took shape, in stone,
I built with love and laughter, joy and dreams,
And if they say, you are not new,
I'll tell them, no, you have simply come to view.
Words call for all the other full
You were an old familiar house, to me!

A Boon To Mankind

"What! Lose the power to speak? Oh, Doctor, surely there is some way out?" There is a way out now for those who have undergone an operation for a malignant throat affection. The artificial larynx, a product of the Bell Telephone Research Department makes it possible for one who has had this organ removed, to speak again. In the case of temporary or permanent paralysis of the vocal chords, the artificial larynx with bellows brings back the power of speech. These two types of artificial larynx are now available through the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. Application should be made to the local office of the Bell Telephone Company. No question of profit will arise. The man using the larynx in the centre picture has had his larynx removed while the one using the bellows has paralysis of the vocal chords. In both cases the artificial larynx makes speech possible.

Christmas At Home

"In half a minute Mrs. Cratchit entered—flushed, but smiling proudly—with the pudding, like a speckled cannon-ball, so hard and firm, blazing in half of half a quartern of ignited brandy, and bedight with Christmas holly stuck into the top."

Not very many words, but in those few words Charles Dickens seems to have gathered together all the reasons why every year Canadians from all over the Dominion look towards England and the old-fashioned Christmas. And the ghostly smell of that Christmas pudding, "like an eating-house and a pastrycook's next door to each other, with a laundress's next door to that!", has an influence on steamship passenger officials as they make up their sailinglists.

This year the Canadian Pacific has arranged four sailings from Saint John, N.B., designed to allow home-ward bound Canadians to reach even the remotest parts of the British Isles in time for the great English festival. They are, the Montclare for Glasgow, Belfast and Liverpool, December 5th, Duchess of Bedford to the same ports December 11th, Montrose to Cherbourg, Southampton and Antwerp December 12th, Duchess of Richmond to Glasgow, Belfast and Liverpool December 16th, for the real last-minute travellers.

Matchmaker Corcoran, of the Queensbury Athletic Club, in Toronto, is living in hope of good wrestlers for the bout here next Tuesday night. President Calder Explains New Rules For Season's Play

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 4—Survey of rules with special reference to revisions made since last season marked a meeting here yesterday of Frank Calder, President of the National Hockey League, with a number of officials who will work in the pro circuit this season.

The antidefence rule must be strictly enforced as laid down in the rule book, Mr. Calder emphasized. Another point which will be enforced this season concerns a player ahead of the puck carrier blocking the goal-keeper's vision on a shot. If the goal keeper's view is thus blocked, the whistle will be sounded before the play is made.

Each official will be responsible for what occurs in his own end of the rink during the playing season. He may call plays in the other end, but must inform his partner of the offence, leaving the latter to declare the penalty.

Players who carry high sticks, with no threat to injure an opponent, but who cause injury by such tactics, will be given a five-minute penalty, said the President. A player who falls on the puck behind his net of his goal in order to prevent a score shall be penalized.

TRIBUTE IS PAID THE RED CROSS

Hamilton, Nov. 4—Warm tribute to the work of the Red Cross Society of Canada was paid last night by Hon. W. H. There were many who required the kindly smile and the sympathe tic words of the Red Cross workers and their co-operation that they might meet the emergencies of the day and look to the future with confidence, said Col. Price.

The Government had recognized the efficiency of the institution in asking it to supervise distribution of clothing and other relief activities he said.

Grid Schedules Draw to Close

Games on Saturday Will Have An Important Bearing

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 4 (CP) — With Montreal Winged Wheelers needing but a single victory to assure them of the Big Four Group Championship, Queens battling it out with Western for the Intercollegiate title and Balmy Beach and Sarnia Imperials ready to set for the Provincial O.R.F.U. title in Sarnia a week from Saturday, the eastern Canadian Rugby group schedules are rapidly drawing to a close.

A heavy week's training schedule has been arranged for the majority of senior clubs and coaches are preparing their material for Saturday's struggles.

Hamilton Tigers have not completely recovered from the lacing they were handed by the powerful Montreal club Saturday, although Coach Billy Hughes had his full squad on the field last night for what proved to be preparation for the week end game with Ottawa. With only a mathematical chance of finishing at the head of the Big Four Group the Hamilton men for has already announced he is lining up a strong aggregation for next season.

Toronto fans will have a chance to look over the McGill College Squad Saturday when the Red shirts hook up with Toronto Varsity. The Blue and White field a snappy signal drill last evening and hope to break into the win column with a victory over the Montrealers.

There's only a fighting chance but we will be there until the end," said Coach Buck McEwan last night when he sent his Argos through a heavy drill before their trip to Montreal this week end.. A victory for the Senators in the Eastern City Saturday will brighten up their hopes of leading the Big Four parade as an Ottawa victory over the Montreal aggregation the following week end and a Toronto victory over the Tigers will place the two teams at the top.

Although they will enjoy a much needed rest this week end, Coach Alex Ponton does not want his Balmy Beach, Dominion champion squad, to go stale before their game with Sarnia and as a result fielded his entire team for a heavy signal drill last night. There are no casualties on the champions roster and barring accidents in practise the Toronto East End squad will enter their game with Imperials one hundred per cent strong.

Goderich, Ont., Nov. 4—An English precedent was quoted in court yesterday in support of the claim that a prisoner was entitled of be discharged if a jury had twice disagreed on his case. It was cited by defence counsel at the trial of Gilford and Harvey McNeil charged with arsund robbery.

The McNeil brothers are alleged to have held up the Bank of Nova Scotia branch at Brussels, Ont., on October 28, 1930 and to have escaped with $5,000. The trial, which is proceeding in Fall Assizes before Mr. Justice Logie, is the third the brothers have faced.

Mr. Justice Logie refused to allow the claim of J. C. Makins, K. C., appearing on behalf of the prisoners, for their discharge.

The RECORD SPEAKS for ITSELF

Flight-Lieut. J. N. Boothman, flying a seaplane seven times over the 31-mile course at an average speed of 340.08 miles per hour, won the third time in succession the Schneider Cup race for Great Britain. The Trophy is now the permanent property of the Royal Aero Club of England. It is significant of the enormous strides taken in the field of aeronautics that the 1913 average was 45.25 miles per hour—contrasting sharply with the 1931 average of 340.08 miles per hour.

This is a remarkable tribute to Britain's supremacy in the air—just as continued supremacy among Canadian cigarettes is a tribute to Turret's superior quality, mildness and fragrance.

After all, nothing can replace good, honest tobacco grown and ripened right out in the field under nature's own sunlight—nothing artificial about that—and the high quality is "imbred".

HUSBAND HELD AFTER MURDER

Wife Found Shot Dead in Kitchen in Montreal

MONTREAL, Que., Nov. 3.—(By the Canadian Press)—Police today held Alexander Ziegler, 45-year-old gardener and said him as a material witness for the inquest over the body of his second wife, aged 37, who was found shot to death on the kitchen floor of their Rosemount home last night.

The victim was shot down from behind, a bullet entering a .22 calibre hunting rifle crashing into the back of her skull as she stood over her clothes in her kitchen.

The rifle was the property of Ziegler, police discovered on investigation, though it was stated it was found in another room of the house. The gun that discharged the fatal shot was found lying on the floor under the victim.

None of the four children was at home when the shooting occurred. A little boy, aged 5, who lives in Pointe from the backyard around 4 o'clock, said he was two hours later her husband came home and found her dead, shot down from the kitchen door.

WIFE'S WAGES CANNOT BE USED BY HUSBAND

Montreal, Que. (By The Canadian Press).—The Province of Quebec since the Quebec provincial Legislature gave a wife the right to control her own wages by a Supreme Court recently applied the principle in refusing to allow a husband to be given by law husband's wages.

The action was that of M. Smith vs. Fred Antonich and the Bank of Montreal garnishee, in which Antonich ex-cane. Antonich had signed a note for $600 and when he could not meet it out of his own funds it was claimed that his wife's savings might be used. An attempt to use them was made, but Mr. Justice Bernier ruled that money earned by a married woman cannot be attached by her husband.

WORLD CONDITIONS CHANCE RAPIDLY

Montreal, Que. (By The Canadian Press)—World conditions are changing rapidly and greater education alone can fit people for the new conditions, and yet the majority of people are educating to not keep pace with the needs of the day. This was the view of Mrs. Beatrice Emery, chairman of the International Council of the New Education Fellowship brings to Canadians from London, England, the centre of their work.

"We must look to education to produce a type of citizen to meet our requirements of tomorrow," she said when interviewed here recently. "But the great problem is to find out what the type we want to build and the method problem is how to educate it.

"We must realize that what the world is becoming more and more is unity," she said. "And therefore we must try to develop the world citizens of the future. This lies the work of our organization."

She will endeavour to interest Canadian delegates in the 6th world conference of the New Education Fellowship, which will be held next summer in Nice, France.

What Theatrical Managers Say of Coming Attractions

At The Belle

ARLISS IS HERE TODAY IN "ALEXANDER HAMILTON"

George Arliss is today at the Belle Theatre in his most stirring play, "Alexander Hamilton".

Mr. Arliss himself wrote the play in collaboration with Mary Hamlin and starred in it on the stage from coast to coast ago on Broadway and in London. It deals with the humanity of Hamilton, rather than with the constructive genius which made him one of the most able of the founders of the republic. He is forty at the time, and implicated in the strange affair with the notorious Mrs. Reynolds, whose machinations endangered the government.

Mr. Arliss will amaze you with the buoyant youthfulness of his appearance, partly by reason of the contrast with the characters he portrayed so flawlessly in "Disraeli," "Old English" and "The Millionaire."

The cast includes Doris Kenyon, Dudley Digges, Alan Mowbray, Hall Hamilton, Colleen Collyer, Charles Middleton, Montague Love, Lionel Belmore, Morgan Wallace, Gregory Kelly, Helen C. Murray, Charles Evans, John Larkin, Evelyn Hall, Russell Simpson and James Durkin.

AUTHOR AWARDS PALM TO "RIDDES OF PURPLE SAGE"

When Zane Grey was asked not long ago which of his famous adventure stories he considered his favorite he answered instantly, "Riders of Th- Purple Sage." The Belle Theatre is this afternoon and during George O'Brien, con- the Belle, Friday for two days.

Grey stands above all competition in the crowded field of Western fiction in which he excels. Hunter and frontiersman himself, he has lived what he writes and writes as clearly and vigorously as he has lived.

Marguerite Churchill, Noah Berry, Yvonne Pelletier are also featured in this picture which Hamilton MacFadden directed.

SCIENTISTS TO VIEW ECLIPSE

Much Expense Involved for an Eclipse Lasting Ten Seconds

Montreal, Que. (By The Canadian Press)—The British scientists and physicists intend to come to Canada next year to observe the total eclipse of the sun on the last day of August, announces Dr. A. S. Eve, McGill University faculty of graduate studies and research at McGill University.

Three English parties are expected, a group from Greenwich will station itself somewhat north of Montreal, others from Cambridge will go down to Magog or Sherbrooke, Quebec, and a third party from the University of London will work from McGill. They will all arrive about a month before the eclipse, will bring expensive instruments and will build cement foundations upon which to fasten them —and all this for an eclipse which will last little more than ten seconds.

RECENT TRIP NOT SERENE

McGill Debaters Nearly Caused Riot in Porto Rico

Montreal, Que (By the Canadian Press)—The recent trip of a team of McGill debaters to Porto Rico was indirectly the cause of a possible revolution, according to word received by these McGill students from Porto Rican friends made during their visit but a few weeks ago. The McGill men were in no way to blame, however.

It appears that a select reception committee was appointed to welcome them to the island on behalf of the university. On this committee were some of the most prominent of the Nationalist party now students of rugby bloc. The latter groups were greatly incensed at what they considered an insult and drew up a monster petition which they sent to the chancellor of the University of Porto Rico, Dr. Carlos Chardon.

The chancellor at once suspended about 200 students for periods ranging from two years to life, and there followed a terrific outcry all over the island. So serious did matters become that the governor decided to reinstate most of the petitioners, although the action was unpardoned and without the university's approval.

Meanwhile, the McGill debaters, blissfully unconscious of the trouble they were causing, returned victoriously to Canada.

MANY DIALECTS NOTED IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Schenectady, N. Y.—English "as she is spoke" over the entire world is what the speaker makes it.

Dr. Frank Fletcher Jr., president of Union College, says English-speaking persons do not all speak the same language. Addressing a student gathering here he noted national, sectional and individual difference in a language used by 100,000,000 people. He found that the language is influenced by leags and bounds "in the mouths of children."

"We can have and speak," said Dr. Jay, "an individual language that is slightly different in form, meaning and intonation from that spoken by any other individual. That is dependent upon the structure of our vocal organs, the climate we have lived in, our general environment, our experience, our reading and our native intelligence."

Moreover, said Dr. Day, each individual has three or more vocabularies that he uses in accordance with what he feels to be fitting under certain circumstances and on certain occasions. But no conscious effort is made in changing these sets of words, he said.

He described them as a, simple vocabulary for the "common folk," one-time farmers, or fishermen reduced to; another for those employing affection and regard and the third used by one's family and intimate friends, a third "perhaps a little stilted," used when the speaker wishes to be most dignified. In writing, he said, there is sometimes used a fourth linguistic in which with "book words perhaps never used in conversation or familiar conversation appear."

"But beyond these four vocabularies," he said, "we all have a fifth that we seldom and perhaps never use in conversation or in the words unseemly and unworthy, but which we will if we honestly search our minds."

"How could you and I," he asked, "use precisely the same language? Not only do we each have an individual vocabulary and individual linguistic history, but if we are clever enough and our ears are sufficiently keenly attuned, we can recognize these qualities in another. Of course we all can do that to a rough degree—we can distinguish the Englishman, Canadian, Yankee, Southerner, and so on."

A language is strong or weak, he said, in accordance with the strength or weakness of the race that speaks it. The British Empire lasted a few centuries longer than the Spanish because it would be speaking a romance language rather than the French or Spanish of today.

BONZO By STUDDY

MIXED BAGGAGE

by Jasper B. Sinclair

From the dejection in his face one would not suspect that Jack Kennedy was just starting on his vacation.

"There won't be a soul there, unless a few old dowagers and their husbands. A fine two weeks that will be!" he said, resigning himself to the thought of an early October vacation up at Summers on the Eel River.

"I hadn't—"

He stopped short. A girl had entered the car, looked appraisingly up the corridor, then sat down in the seat opposite Jack, grumbling young man.

He stared intently at her, while he put her value on the seat, then sat down. It was a pleasing profile, consisting of a well-rounded chin, a pair of rounded lips, a nose that was just right, long black lashes and a blue hat set at a saucy angle.

"If that girl was going up to Summers, they'd be an agreeable two weeks after all," he thought, and of course she isn't. No such luck for me—added inwardly.

He flushed and turned away as the girl looked across the aisle at him. Then she picked up a magazine and was soon immersed in a story.

When the train started, Jack settled back to a contemplation of her pleasant if rounded profile. He was also going to Summers. There was nothing of the Eel about him, but he could not resist glancing at his pretty neighbor as frequently as he dared.

If Jack had been a more observant young man he might have noted that the magazine pages were being turned rapidly. If he had looked steadily for any length of time, he would have noted equally surreptitious glances cast his way by the girl.

But Jack saw neither.

After the conductor had passed through the car, punching tickets, Jack smiled happily The girl across the aisle was also going to Summers! It was almost too good to be true! His hand had unknowingly heard the conductor reply to her query as to when they would arrive at this place.

"Of course I'll meet her there," Jack reasoned in his thoughts. "But the chance might not come for several days. Which would be a hell of a shame. Those two weeks are so short, so fleeting!"

Again he glanced at the girl. Then for the first time he noticed her valise. Scarcely believing his sight, he glanced down at his own to reassure himself. The two valises were unmistakably of the same shape—even to the initials 'J.K.' on the cover.

"What a coincidence!" he thought in happy confusion!

He could not but believe that such a similarity augured well for her valise. Surely Luck had seen fit to send this girl to Summers, at a time when Jack was thinking of losing his forthcoming vacation the day before.

Later she laid her magazine on the seat and walked down through the car. A sudden, irresistible impulse seized Jack. His very boldness staggered him an instant. And then he thought that there could be no possible harm in it. Luckily their seats were inareat the back entrance of the car.

Swiftly he glanced up the corridor, leaned over and picked up laid hers at his feet.

His face was flushed.

"That ought to hasten our meeting," he grinned. "After we get there I'll take them over here first. Then when she finds its not hers she'll smile. That will be easy."

He was staring placidly out the window, when the girl returned to her seat. He did manage, however, to squint at her out of the corner of his eye. Nothing changing his position. Thankfully he noticed that she was still looking even glancing at her bag. Then he heard her open the valise and began reading. He sighed relievedly.

When he judged that they would soon reach Summers, he left his seat, nonchalantly picking up the smoking car. In reality he trembled the girl to have the opportunity of seeing that his bag was identical with hers. Then there would be no argumentive regarding her action when she found that she had the wrong valise.

An ingenious young man, Jack Kennedy!

As the train pulled into Summers' station, he sauntered down the forward corridor, picked up his valise and followed the girl to the platform. There he waited for only a few steps to the resort, flanked by giant redwoods and facing the river.

Other young men, riding so long in the same train coach with such an agreeable young girl, might have found means of speaking to her. At least they would have spoken upon entering the lobby of the summer resort.

But Jack took a circumspect young man, and prided himself on his circumspection. It was "safer," he said, to be circumspect, to arrange their meeting in this manner. Then he would respectfully he thought it a well-concocted plan, except for the fact that he inadvertently he paced the lobby for an hour after the girl had been shown to her room. Then he had decided to wait in his own room for a knock on the door with her valise. Then he returned to the lobby. He was about to descent with the information that their baggage had somehow become mixed.

Six o'clock and no sign of the girl. Certainly she was busy in his own room. "Looks like it's up to me to start something," he muttered, "I'll just open the valise, then hurry down to the desk with it and say that I'm sorry for her."

He picked up the valise, set it on the bed and began fumbling to loosen the straps. "Looks as much like mine as two peas."

Abruptly he stopped. The smile left his face. He straightened up and stared at the valise—his own valise! Hastily he looked around the room, he ran out of the room and looked down the hall, thinking that the girl if she had not side-stepped his path.

"What's the trouble?" she queried. "You look as though you've seen a ghost."

"I have! That is—"

She laughed merrily. "I know what you're thinking," she said then. "You've just discovered that when the White Star was transferred to Great Britain and trying to effect a repurchase of the Line,

Cold Insurance

He carries it with him, ready for just such times. That tingling sensation in the throat—that first sneeze—and Aspirin will stop it. If his throat feels sore, he will end the soreness with one good gargle made from three tablets.

Dangerous days and nights follow the neglect of "a common cold!" Every case of tonsilitis began with "just a sore throat!" It's a wise plan to take Aspirin after any undue exposure to bad weather, or whenever there is any chance that you've caught cold. Aspirin can't possibly hurt you; and how it does banish the aches and pains caused by colds, neuralgia, neuritis, lumbago, and even rheumatism.

Aspirin will insure your comfort through the worst cold season. The more susceptible you are to colds, the more you need it. Sold at drug stores. Made in Canada.

LEOPOLD CONTINUES EVIDENCE AT TRIAL OF 9

Copies of Letters Put in as Exhibits at Trial of Alleged Communists

Sergeant Leopold Continues Sterling Testimony Thursday

WHAT IS COMMUNISM

Leopold Tells of Studying Studied Literature

(By Jack Hambleton, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

TORONTO, Nov. 5.—Concluding a long and a half in the witness box, Sergeant John Leopold of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, finished his evidence in the trial of nine alleged Communist leaders shortly before noon today. For seven years he had acted as secretary of the Reconstruction Party of Canada, he testified yesterday. Today he continued his remarkable story.

Letter Exhibited.

Much of this morning's testimony hinged around a letter written to "Comrade Rawlenko" by Mathew Popovitch, one of the accused. This letter described how the party records were destroyed, mentioned the establishment of a new Communist party in Toronto.

Comrade Rawlenko" recognized the letter, said, was urgent need in Canada for a militant organization of workers to be confided to and carry to a successful culmination the various struggles for the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment in the workers' republic." Such a party had already been established, it said.

Sergeant Leopold further informed that Jack MacDonald, "one o fthe outstanding Labor leaders and organizers in Eastern Canada," was coming west and arranged for MacDonald to address the Regina organization on "the class struggle of today."

Second Letter.

Another letter he copied was from Tim Bell, one of the organizers of the Canadian Labor Defence League, reported that a meeting of the "party" or executive organization, had been broken up at Chicago. The arrest of William Z. Foster, noted U. S. Radical leader, was also described. The letter was received by witness in 1922, he stated. Warrants for Rawlenko that he and his fellow comrades should not come to jail in Chicago or attempt for the time being to extradite them, it said of them.

Joseph John MacDonald, defense counsel, cross-examined the witness briefly.

Used Own Funds.

Leopold stated that he had solicited members for the Reconstruction Party of the Communist party "when he had been instructed to do so," and had also used funds of his own to this end. "Under instructions I did and this, too, was done according to instructions." He did not say from whence the instructions emanated.

In reply to a question, he said he would place a definition of the Communist movement, and had read Marx, Lenin and Engels. He gave his own personal opinion, the understanding thereof by "Communism is Socialism." It worked for "the bringing about of the dictatorship and the formation of a Socialist state" with "destruction of the present economic system."

Spoke Identified.

Sergeant Leopold Zaneth, also of the R. C. M. P., identified a letter signed Jacob Penner, secretary of the Buck, one of the accused. The letter was addressed to Penner and outlined the education policy of the International and spoke of the allotment of two candidates to the Lenin School at Moscow for a special two

UNEMPLOYED CROWD INTO SMALL ROOM

TRUCK DRIVERS

Problem of Idle Single Men and Poll Tax

Owing to the fact that alterations are contemplated in their present club rooms in the old Liberal hall on Bridge Street, the hall was not available last night and nearly one hundred members of the Unemployed Association and friends jammed themselves into a room in the rear of 348 Front Street.

During the opening session Chairman Harry Hanna lauded the executive committee of the organization for the excellent work that had been completed since the last meeting, and the reports they had turned in. He also lauded the hall had been instrumental in fitting out many of the boys who had been called for construction work in the Bridge Street, with clothing donated him by the many citizens in the city.

Esplanade vs. Auxiliary Main

Which Will Benefit Labor Most at the Present Moment and For the Future

Did Belleville council allow to pass an opportunity to take one of the most progressive steps ever offered for the betterment and the future benefit of the city in turning down for the time being the esplanade project and adopting in its place the duplicate water main plan as a relief measure?

The Ontario Intelligencer believes the council's decision on Saturday last did allow to pass such an opportunity to further the best interests of Belleville in a very substantial way and at the same time make a record for themselves as far-seeing business men and legislators. We believe that this opinion is supported by a large majority of the citizens who have considered the present.

Did the council in deciding in favor of the auxiliary main take the better step from the standpoint of the immediate concern of every citizen to supply work for the unemployed?

On this question the answer, in the opinion of this paper, must be that the esplanade is the undertaking greatly to be preferred. It is clear to every citizen that neither the esplanade project nor the auxiliary main proposition would have been considered at the present time if it had not been for the unusual conditions which have arisen owing to the scarcity of employment, and the large number of unemployed who stand in pressing need of work. Relief of this jobless condition is the only reason why either project has been considered at this

369 Jobless Registered

Three hundred and sixty-nine men are now on the city's relief list for the unemployed at the City Hall.

On this number there are 290 who are married, or, being single, have a wife and family dependent. Advantage and status of marriage did not in that they secure support of a widowed mother, but they do benefit by the expected that relief construction work soon to take place will absorb the greater majority, while other work to be undertaken will provide for the rest.

Alfred Maguire Explains Position to Canadian Club

LONDON, Ont., Nov. 5.— Sir Adam Beck, when confronted with investigation, said he had no more power to the Quebec interests for power than he had in offer was refused; Ontario Hydro was fortunate in being able to get power delivered at Ottawa.

This was the pivotal point of the address delivered by Hydro commissioner C. Alfred Maguire, before the Canadian Club here yesterday, in announciation of hydro policies, which he declared to be precisely those organized for 25 years by the late hydro knights. Only through ignorance of hydro facts, he said, could anyone object to contract power as "departure from Beck policy", for hydro was founded and in the early days expanded, on purchased power."

COMPACT IN FORCE WHEN ONE MAN DIES

Sealed in 17 Foot Boat 40 Miles Off Long Island

CARE FOR FAMILY

Men Were Swept to Sea When Fuel Gave Out

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—A solemn compact, sealed between three thirsty, tortured men on a seventeen-foot boat on the open Atlantic was in force today.

The task of carrying out its terms rested upon the emaciated shoulders of David Warshauer, for it came into effect when his brother-in-law and companion during the nine years of bootlegging died yesterday from the effects of the ordeal.

While they faced death with little hope for much, Warshauer, who is the father of one son, and living in Dorchester, N.J., two small boys, agreed that if one of them was saved he would care for both families. Their wives are sisters.

Thirsty beyond the unconscious when the men were picked up by the coast guard cutter, Cuyahoga, Tuesday. He died of acute congestion, exposure and shock after recovering conscious long enough to express his love for his wife and children.

Warshauer is in a serious condition with symptoms of the gangrene which threatens both his hands and feet, and a good deal of privation is covered up under a severe wall of pride, mistaken, maybe; a poor thing, perhaps, but it is all some folks have left and they cling to it. No one must be allowed to lack the necessary things while in Belleville. The most deserving cases are singled out for they will try and hide their needs. A clever newspaper scandal died of starvation on the street of New York city the other day, that fabulously wealthy city with its many millions of dollars in high buildings scrapping the check. But no one is allowed to beg, but brave enough to die. Profanity, perhaps, but no one else must be sought out and relieved. No one must be allowed to go hungry in such a prosperous city and nation. But there be an awakening of the Christian spirit, "Who is my neighbor?" No need to ask, we are all neighbors.

Chairman Gene Illey of the Relief Committee wants to get in all clothing, especially for men and children, canned goods, potatoes, other vegetables, apples, canned and preserved fruits and vegetables. Bring in what you have and it will be used to advantage.

Co-operating with the civic unemployment relief it has been thought necessary that a paid assistant secretary be appointed. The position appointed will be capable of handling all business of the different committees and will have charge of the office. Miss Ada Ferris, formerly vacated by the gas department, is the city hall.

CHAPTER TO AID RELIEF WORK

The first meeting for the fall term of Argyll Chapter, I.O.D.E. was held in the Officer's Mess, Victoria Road, on Wednesday afternoon. The Regent, Mrs. Eric Keeler being in the chair. It was decided to encourage the best effort of the Chapter on local relief work. The question of how such a strong committee was organized in conjunction with the civic committee formed.

Relief and Welfare Mobilization

Activities of Various Committees of Relief Work in Belleville

In Wednesday's paper an appeal was made for heavy clothing for the men going north on the labor battalions. The response was immediate but the need is still greater than the supply. Get busy or those heavy overcoats taking up room in the closet and needlessly wearing them, heavy underclothing, sweaters, fur coats and boots will be offered at least five million dollars have been added to the value of farm products and farmers received by the recent advances in prices. This estimate, Murray said is on grain which has not been sold and will market in that form and includes the increase in revenue from grains converted into livestock products which the farmers will also market at increased prices.

Based upon reports from crop reporters, Murray said, it was that there were held on 12,500,000,000 bushels of corn on Nov. 1. This is compared with 2 1-4 per cent of the new crop had been fed by that date and that farmers were holding 75 million bushels of old corn. From this he estimated that 500 million bushels of corn will be marketed as grain by farmers.

Of the wheat crop Murray estimated the May wheat at 89 5-8 cents and December wheat at 41 1-8 cents, in spite of the heavy profit-taking by speculators, the farmer has actually gained 88 million dollars on his stored wheat, 50 million dollars on the corn, he will sell as grain, and 15 million on the oats to be marketed for cash. This totals a gain of 125 million dollars to farm revenue more than to-day.

Every rise of one cent per bushel in the wheat and corn prices add more than 10 millions dollars to the value of farm products in farmers' hands, Murray added.

Yesterday's new high levels in wheat and grains were caused by speculative buying, market experts said. The close was almost 2 cents higher than Tuesday's close, and nearly 3 cents more than earlier quotations by yesterday's session.

"Give a Man a Job" Makes Life Better for Citizen

"Just a minute—just a minute—don't rush by that way, I want to tell you something," called a citizen to a representative of the Ontario-Intelligencer as he was on the way up Front street, early on Thursday morning.

"Come in, let your paper last night about people doing odd jobs was mighty fine, and I want to tell you done by a man out of work and that made me think I had some work around the place to do and I've been putting off getting at it for but last night, after reading the piece in the paper, I decided to let some one else do it and this morning I went to the employment bureau and got a man, I'll tell you he was mighty glad of the work. When I was home at noon I found the job completed and donned to pack his car from the city.

"Good for you," said the newspaperman, "keep up the good work. Tell your friends about it and get them to give a man a job. There are many jobs around the city and jobs and lots of citizens can do the same as you have done — it only needs a little push. Any man or any one is welcomed by the men who are looking for work and they intend doing themselves. IS UNQUALIFY RESIGNED BY THE MAN OUT OF WORK. 125 MILLIONS INCREASE IN WHEAT VALUE

Estimate of Increase in Valuation Through Recent Rise

FARMERS' GRAIN

One Cent Rise Means 10 Million Dollars to Farmers

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 5 — Nat Murray, quoted by The Chicago Tribune today as a veteran crop expert, declared at least five million dollars have been added to the value of farm products farmers received by the recent advances in prices. year course. It contained also instructions and a questionnaire. The latter was to be filled in and sent to "Alice O. Ayres", who, according to Leopold, was the wife of Tim Buck.

Another letter outlined a plan of study and instruction for the "proletariat" was also issued from Moscow, according to the evidence.

The nine men who are facing trial are Tim Buck, Tom Ewen, John Boychuk, Sam Cohen, Ames T. Hill, Malcolm L. Bruce, Mathew Popovitch, Mike Golinski and Thomas Cacic. They are charged with being and aiding as members of an unlawful association, and becoming parties to a seditious conspiracy.

Just before adjournment for lunch Detective Sergeant Nursey, of Toronto, identified handbills and told of a Communist demonstration here in August, 1929, in which police charged the demonstrators.

FIRST FALL OF SNOW SEEN

Fall Mixed With Rain Which Made Conditions Disagreeable

Not to be outdone by Northern Ontario, the Bay of Quinte district was visited by a snow storm on Thursday afternoon. Previous to the fall of snow a large black cloud was seen coming over the horizon of the western sky. Then to the darkness the public were of the opinion that the district was to be visited by a severe electric storm, but they received quite a surprise when a miniature snow storm arrived.

It is usually about this time of year that the district is visited by the first fall of snow, but as to reming all good Canadians that winter is just around the corner. Although adults took upon the coming of the snow quite skeptically, the youth of Canada always regards the first snow fall with open arms as it provides means for some wonderful fun such as snowball fights or the building of snow forts and snow men. Proving the old saying that: "it is an ill wind that blows no one some good."

Scientists have found what they believe to be the ideal of the ancient Cretan city of Tamis.

$200 DAMAGE FROM BLAZE

Home on South John St. Damaged on Roof and Walls

Fire of an unknown origin broke out in the upper bed room of the home of Mrs. Fred Mumby, 170 South John Street early this morning. The blaze made considerable headway before the department was notified and the flames had spread well up into the attic. As the shingled roof had been painted it burned quickly and the firemen were forced to tear away the metal roof to get at the blaze. Considerable damage was caused to the upper floor of the building. The building is a double house and there was quite a bit of damage done to the roof. The damage is estimated at about $200.00 and there was no one carried on the house or contents.

JAPAN TAKES NEW STEPS

Positive Measures Taken to Meet Situation at Nonni River

Tokyo, Nov. 5.—(AP)—The Japanese war office today announced "positive steps" were being taken and would be decided upon to cope with the threatening position facing Japanese occupation troops at the Nonni River bridge in Manchuria, fifteen of whom were killed and many wounded yesterday in a battle with Chinese forces.

Moscow, Nov. 5 (AP)—The newspaper Pravda, commenting on attacks on the Japanese policies in Manchuria, today published what it described as a secret declaration by Baron Tanaka when he was Premier of Japan in 1927 asserting that Japan must crush the United States in the Pacific.

This document, said Pravda, bears out the charge that Japan's present action in Manchuria is a long planned part of the effort to extend Japan's supreme hegemony in the Pacific.

"Japan's aggressive tendencies will not end with China," said the newspaper, "it has designs on the Philippines, the Malayan Archipelago, Oceania, Dutch Indies and Australia."

Then the editorial quoted the alleged Tanaka statement which it said had recently been published in China, from which protection this document said, "Japan must remove its difficulties to eastern Asia by establishing a policy of blood and iron. If we intend to win control over China we must first break the United States. To capture China we must also capture Manchuria and Mongolia."

The conflict in Manchuria, said Pravda, may presage a fight from a world civilian war. For it is inseparably linked with conflict among Imperialist nations for control of the Pacific. The Japanese occupation is described as the worst kind of aggression, typical of Imperialistic policy, and an invitation for a new Imperialistic war."

MERRYMAKERS' DANCE SUCCESS

Proceeds Given to Aid Belleville Hockey Club in Season

Mathematicians are those bent-stoop-shouldered and grey-headed old fellows who peer at you from behind their glass spectacles, and who can make ordinary little things look like the stars and sun in the heavens. Figures, they call them, and big, red, ever, and big, have computed to the exact yard just how far a dancing couple will travel during the course of one fox-trot or one fox trot. Figures are available but we haven't time to look them up.

Under the trailing green and amber shaded lights in Jubilee Academy and to the tantalizing rhythm of Mac Meredith orchestra the Merry Makers held their opening monthly dance of the season and from the proceeds of which will be turned in to the Belleville Arena Hockey Club, a good time was had by all.

Just how many miles any one of the 150 couples who were present led during the course of it is a mooted question and one which we care to bring up. Suffice it to say, however, that every one who attended had a good time trying to live up to his or her conception of the duties of a member of the club meant. Merry makers were in evidence, as well as the latest designed gowns, fresh from the shops, which adorned the ladies. There was sparkling jewelry and gaiety, comradeship, informality and friendliness, as everyone said "just that touch which every modern social gathering of young men find young ladies demands."

Certainly the dance was a success if measured by the good time had by those who attended the ball; by the liveliness which prevailed and even by the comments heard, and if this particular dance can be considered a success, it is necessary to follow, then the best evidence this struggling young hockey club has to give is to see the excessive and strange for immediate announcement of a repetition of their latest dance. Watch for it, in better times are coming!

During the evening four spot dances were enjoyed and Mrs. Hollis Wilbur, Dr. Tice, Mrs. Wilbur and Miss Carrie Parks were fortunate in receiving the beautiful favors offered.

example of the small city plant that it can find no fault with either its operation or the quality of it's product". Cobourdeau is at a similar stage. Sediment is practically undetectable and the aeration of water is perfect. When asked about activities of this company he stated that a complete system of construction was contemplated by himself and company which included all cities including Canada. "Calgary is installing a four million dollar system, York township contemplates a sewage disposal plant of another one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars; Ottawa is spending one and one quarter millions of her filtration scheme and Kitchener is starting her new sewage disposal plant with an estimated cost of three hundred and thirty thousand". This should go far towards strengthening the present prevailing impression that Canada is on the increase as far as business goes, and that the alleged slump is now over.

Just as he was leaving town last night he was asked a question he was not prepared for: "Will you still drop in on us and then in between times?" "Why, certainly," he stated, "we do not build a plant and then forget about it; we take an interest in the work we have completed and every time our business permits us to we are glad to be able to drop in, check things over and advise if necessary, if advice is needed, but" he concluded, "I don't think that much advice is or will be necessary in this particular plant". "I find nothing but affectionate cleanliness and satisfaction with every one".

over were answered. As to the subject of both truck drivers now employed on the city truck, it was learned, and carried along some discussion that one driver should be laid off, however, it is the only reasonable, to expect that one of the men be subject to lay off as well as the first. The question of single men which is the case with a new single to it has been stated that it was unfair and unjust to expect single men who could get no work in the city will work at any job, to pay poll tax, a member said that there should be some system arranged whereby a man with the municipality is avoid-this necessity. This after a vote had been taken was referred back to the committee and it will be brought to the attention of the officials.

Mr. Worrell then made the motion that the thanks be tak-en and expressed in writing which will be accepted by Mr. Lynch and his co-workers for their splendid co-operation with the central relief committee. This unanimously passed and will be carried out.

Two Day Meet

As to the question of men who how hold two separate and distinct jobs in the city and who are now on snow removal, the offer of Mr. L. Staiting that it was unfair to employ four men at his office, and in co-operation with the committee would cut out the men who are not residents of the city; the question was referred back to the relief committee arrears for rent, and the statement made that there are still men from out-of-town working on various jobs. These were also referred back to the executive committee to await further action.

George Arliss in Alexander Hamilton

George Washington, "Father of His Country", hero of Valley Forge and Yorktown, first President and the first President of the United States, soldier and statesman, outstanding character in the history of the United States, rode his white horse across the screen at the Belle Theatre last night, reviewed his troops and then stepped up before the grand jury to govern those thirteen disunited states with the power of Washington. The play was "Alexander Hamilton", produced by George Arliss, and of course George Washington is more or less out of the picture background for the life of Arliss. The play made a great hit in the United States by the same portrayal. One of the most critical periods of history there was the important will be played by Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of Treasury, and member of Washington's cabinet. Other characters of the time, prominent in their near setting are portrayed in the play by splendid actors, and Doris Kenyon, Margaret Mann and Joan Wilson

Pulsing Hum of Industry Experienced by Reporter

Is Amply Repaid By Sights He Saw in Local Plant

BUSY, NOT IDLE

Up the hill tringed your reporter, past old houses cluttered to a spot with age; past Rhues not so new; yet newer, past houses which had, just a few weeks to go before they were finished, houses which not yet had felt the palter of little feet; houses which stood out stark and raw with path and fresh brick work—past all these he went, out to the limits, of the east side of the city, where an impending skating rink is factory stood. Past the girl who took the name and went searching for the man whom I had come to see; the manager, at present, was not Chicago, but an alert-looking young man took me into his office. He was, I presume, the man in charge. And in there, with typewriter handy, I listened to and watched him draw sketches and place new ideas and new methods of production, of synchronism, of operation, of new machines which the busy productive world is forever inventing and creating.

Outside the door came the pulsing hum of machinery, the clackety-tind of punch presses, the clatter of manufactured parts being dropped into receivers and the whine of the automatics running off records of steel—making fittings to be used on cars all over the world.

Inside was the calmer, cool drawers of file cases, the executive drone of those who controlled the destinies of the two hundred and twenty-five or more employed in the same building; the rattling of papers and the scuffling of busy, active feet.

Suddenly I wanted to see this plant, to go through it, to compare with my own eyes other larger plants in Detroit and Oshawa and Cleveland with the same methods in use. And I expressed my wish.

"Certainly," said Mr. Young, the man in charge, in the absence of Mr. Rowsome. "Be glad to," he reiterated and he obligingly led the way.

Past piles of stock we went, piles that reached to the roof and piled stock rooms bulging with more.

We saw automatic machines taking bars and five bars of half-inch hexagon, polished steel to one end and pass the manufactured little fittings—fittings you use every time you grease your car—into a basket at the other end. I saw others cutting three rings for valves, and saw I watched another crunching the castors you use on your bed, into some semblance of form, and saw, a man anywhere near.

Upstairs we went to the "new plant." The light, airy, well designed radio department, and there I watched young boys and young women out of a heterogeneous collection of transformers and filling and choke coils and filament secondaries, fabricate the "innards" of the radio you, must have listened to one time. It watched them beginning one at the lower end with a part or two, and I was there when it came off the other end, ready to play.

I was explained the system of synchronization and the flashing of the red lights which warned them that their time of operation was up. Far down at one end came the food stamped music of a harp dance from Chicago, up at the other end men with headphones on were testing parts, checking for mistakes—making sure of accuracy before they were installed in the sets, and everywhere was the hustle of speed. "We have reverse of these operations timed to the exact minute," said Mr. Young at my elbow, "and we know even before we start a man or a girl on the assembly line just what he or she can do. Take this little stamping, for instance," and he showed me a thin strip of metal recently punched out from one of the many presses—"we knew before we even set the machine up just how many we could work it from an active—or a dull—operator a day. There is no guess work in this business, we couldn't afford it."

Downstairs past the piles of stock we went again, and back into the plating room where our bubbling tanks gave off a rising steam. Here is where we plate our stocks and fittings," and, he went on, proudly we can do any plating job that any one else can do—nickel, copper, chromium or just plain brass" and from the size of the tanks, the experienced look of the men in attendance and the amount of chemicals stored here, I had to agree with him.

Then it was as we were going out I happened to remember. I had come to see Rhues to ask him a question—a question I had asked a lot of merchants and manufacturers in this town, and of which I will only be said later: "Depression's Decline in Business", Huh! Our staff will never larger and business was never better! We'p too busy to think of that.

--Foil Cats purchased for less than $50 by Dr. Fred McLeish of Kingston has set the Grand Circuit ablaze during the past summer. He won every principal stake contested for over the Raging Grand and in so doing hung up the record for the fastest four heats ever contested in the history of Harness racing. On Thanksgiving Day his owner J. M. Scully, Kingston, who purchased the horse last fall from McLeish saw him break the track record for Kingston oval pacing a mile better than 2.07. This horse has a rugged constitution and can go far and fast. It is likely that the horse will be sent over the Grand Circuit again next season. The paces was tendered in all his races by Vic Fleming the Canadian veteran and it was sure a real combination.

WILL DEMAND A ROYAL COMMISSION

MILTON, Nov. 5.—"Nothing short of a royal commission or judicial investigation will suffice," declared Dr. George McQuibban, M. P. P., as he concluded a vitalizing attack on the Hydro administration since 1925, at the annual meeting of the Halton Liberal-Progressive Association at Milton last night. "The canker of conspiracy and political intrigue has been busy at the very roots of Hydro," he said, "and but the story has not yet been told. It it were but the fact that power is being exported to the United States at one-third of the cost to Canadian industries the greater crime could be committed against this great provincial institution."

He said that the demand for a complete investigation into the provincial system would be made at the next session of the legislature.

Due to fall of the Canadian dollar and also the French franc, there will be no reduction in the price of wine to Canadian the coming winter, according to L. R. Cordeau, Chairman of the Quebec Liquor Commission, interviewed aboard Canadian Pacific liner Montcalm by a rugged constitution and can go far and fast. It is likely that the horse will be sent over the Grand Circuit again next season. The paces was tendered in all his races by Vic Fleming the Canadian veteran and it was sure a real combination.

SPEED

When motor speeds are under discussion, particularly when the question of the elimination of the high speed limit on cars on the highways is before the public it is important for motorists to know how far a car travels when the brakes are put on. Of course speed is one of the determining factors in the space covering while the brakes are on, another is the condition of the roadway. This matter is dealt with in a statement in The New York Times regarding a scale presented to the Society of Automotive Engineers. The following ought to be learned by every motorist:

A properly equipped car travelling at 20 miles an hour on a concrete road can be brought to a full stop in a few inches less than 15 feet. But if it is travelling at 40 miles an hour it will require not twice as much room to stop but four times as much, or 60 feet. If it is travelling 60 miles an hour it will need 135 feet of highway before it can be stopped.

The minute the car is tried out on other surfaces the coefficient of friction diminishes and the required distances increase. On firm gravel they are 27 feet, 107 feet and 240 feet, respectively, for speeds of 20, 40 and 60 miles an hour; the corresponding figures for 'wet creosoted wood block' are 133, 536 and 1,200.

"This rapid progression affords one ready explanation of the observed close relation between high speeds and fatal accidents."

ECONOMIST PHYSICIANS

A writer in the New York Times on the subject of economic psychiatry" has some interesting words to offer on the recent feeling of gloom which was over that country and which it is still suffering in a long trail of unemployment and kindred ills. He says that the economic situation is not the only one present to the mind of the U. S. public have been looking upon it as a mind diseased and more in need of the minister than the doctor. "Hence," says The Times, "the cautious testings, the delicate reference to symptoms; the roundabout inquiries about the state of health; the remote suggestions; the hopeful predictions of ultimate recovery. The truth is, of course, that the economists have so often before been mistaken, and seen the patient go from bad to worse under their treatment, that they necessarily have become more modest in their diagnosis and prescriptions. If today they appear a little hesitant and even timid, it is because experience has taught them the folly of being cocksure.

"Yet at present they are undeniably on the right track. The trouble with this country may not be wholly mental, but the remedy, when it is discovered, will largely be. This is one reason why the assembling of encouraging facts in the financial and industrial situation, the demonstration that certain acute fears have been groundless, the piling up of favorite signs, have so far failed of their purpose. They have not penetrated to the core of popular mind psychology—to the unconscious, so to speak, of the people, where powerful influences so often mysteriously take their course. Here is where we must look for the decisive change. When it comes, it will derive not from statistics or from figures of banking resources, reports of improved business here and there, but from a sudden deep conviction, probably produced in the minds of multitudes, that the worst is over that better times are at hand, and that the hour has arrived for everybody to be cheerful and enterprising.

"By so much, our economist-physicians are right. Their task is to help remove obsessions and inhibitions. So soon as these can be cleared from the mentality of the country, there will come the beginnings of the altered popular temper for which we are all on the watch. If it is true that as a man thinketh, so is he, the same holds of a nation. The moment when the great majority of our citizens begin to think in terms of returned prosperity, it will appear bright on the national horizon."

MANITOBA

Reports of conditions brought back from Manitoba by business men are gratifying and show a healthy balance of trade and agricultural tone. The province did not have a crop failure this year and agricultural production has been up to normal.

Business men in the west, too, according to reports are looking hopefully forward to the opening up and revival of trade.

When such healthy signs come from the Near West, the East ought to feel optimistic.

The T. and N. O. Railway, with a surplus to hand over to the Province of Ontario, is lonely among railways at the present moment, according to the records of U. S. railways.

SOMEONE'S FAITH
By Aline Michaelis

With someone dear believing
In everything you do,
You still can keep achieving
High goals and projects new;

Fresh laurels you are gaining
As seasons swiftly move,
Fresh heights and hopes attaining
Through strength of someone's love.

No force that man can reckon
Is potent as the gaze
Which from loved eyes upon us beckon
To glad and glamorous ways.

Whom someone's faith is clinging
To you through every hour,
Ah, then your heart goes singing
And all your world's in flower!

SIX OF THE CITY COUNCIL are in favor of the new backbone arches voted against it. Too close a vote to warrant dropping the project for another without changing seats, seems to me.

IT IS SAID that one reason the esplanade project was shelved for the auxiliary water main was the assertion that the latter work would employ more labor. That idea is all wet for the esplanade work would employ a steady demand, doling out more to labor than the waterworks ditch.

THE CITY COUNCILLORS who had courage enough to put through the two bridge constructions in the face of criticism and opposition have rendered a great service for Belleville which will not soon be forgotten. The esplanade was another opportunity for the present city council to show their calibre and create something for the lasting benefit of Belleville, a project which would have made this year's council loom even greater in the eyes of posterity than the bridge builders of last year's council. It takes vision and it takes the pioneer backbone to put big projects through, and the vision is blurred if one eye is kept on possible votes of reactionaries at the next election.

RESPONSES TO the Give-a-Man-a-Job appeal have been prompt and numerous and the Government Employment Office, under Major Lorne Green, has furnished jobless men and women for all kinds of jobs this week from an hour to several days' work from a call. One call said they would like some work done but could only pay fifty cents. This order was filled just as promptly and gladly as one for a week's work. Give-a-Man-a-Job Campaign gives Dad an excellent excuse to humor that tired old lumbago back and gives junior more time to practise those licks for the school squad now, and for Varsity later.

THAT RESTLESS TIDE OF HUMANITY which ebbed and flowed across Canada this summer contained many bright young Britishers, from England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, mostly in their early twenties. These lads were brought out to work on farms and came with bright hopes and ambitions. Many of their hearts are sore at the prospects of prosperity as pointed out by Canadian Government and steamship and railway agents in the Old Country. Their hopes were not realized and after drifting from farm to construction work, thence to the cities and factories, they find themselves hunted back and forth across the land like some kind of contagious disease. "Keep moving" forms their marching orders and they are hurried on in the futile quest for work where there is no work and then they must do. Many have drifted through Belleville and are still drifting through. They are entertained at the police station, given a meal and a place to sleep, then told perforce to keep moving as there is no work here for them and Belleville must look after her own. Surely this is a state of affairs that needs looking into. These boys came here at our invitation and now we have no place for them in our scheme of things. They feel that life holds nothing but gloom for them. Why chase them back and forth to suffer cold and hunger as the weather becomes severe. Belleville citizens who have had a chance to study this situation at close hand are of the opinion that the government should do something for these young Britishers and not allow them to degenerate into careless tramps, which in their certain fate if allowed to wander as at present. It has been suggested that each municipality assume the care of a limited number of these young men for the winter and see that they have a fighting chance to make good. This is of course not to interfere with the care of those citizens who are permanent residents here and have the first call for relief if needed. Let's think it over.

Other Papers' Opinions

RISE IN WHEAT

The rise within four weeks of 26 cents a bushel in the price of wheat is unquestionably an event of high economic importance. When the great decline began toward the end of 1929, during which had carried down the price of wheat by 80 cents a month ago, it had begun to cause anxiety approaching this. For many reasons it has attracted world interest in business circles. The fall of wheat to 44 1-3 cents a bushel on the Chicago market, in the first week of October, fixed a price far below cost of production in the country. The long continuance of an unremunerative market had crippled the farming district's power to buy.

It has not only shaken confidence in banks which were lenders of money to the farmers, but it was probably responsible for the present set-back in the all but unprecedented curtailment in distribution of goods, a movement which has cut down the earnings of our railways. Its influence on the financial situation was by no means confined to the United States. Reduction by 15 to 70 per cent in the value of their staple export paralyzed the foreign trade of many countries. It played an important part in the difficulties encountered by them in meeting their foreign obligations and, by creating uncertainty and hesitation in all graingrowing communities, it brought new business almost to a little difficulty.—New York Times.

SHE SPEAKS WITH EASE

We doubt if there is another individual in the Dominion who can toss off a speech with less worry than Mrs. Agnes Macphail, Ontario M.P. In Toronto the other evening she was asked to talk to the Chiropractic Association during a convention, and at once she was able to inform her listeners that the British electors had bungled things when they gave women the vote on voting day. A couple of sentences will show how easy it is for Miss Agnes to analyze a situation and arrive at conclusions: "Before the recent election I believed the British electors were more intelligent than our own, but I find they are just about the same. The majority in Britain today is often wrong."

We do hope that Miss Macphail is commencing to realize the intelligence of Canadian electors, makes exception in the case of those in Southeast Grey. Surely she will admit that they, at least, have an intelligence in selection that is rather above the average.

Turning from elections to economics, Miss Macphail made this statement: "Every man and woman in any country is its natural resources and the labor to develop those into goods and services when and where required." That statement is not original: it has been said many times before, and it has become somewhat flat as a pancake.—Stratford Beacon Herald.

Little Benny's Note Book

Today was Mom's day off and this afternoon I went around town ma downtown and we met pop in his office and we all went to a restaurant for supper and the waiter gave us each a big menu card, me saying, O, can I order me one?

I think id better order for you pop will be safer, ma says, and I said, Well O, ma, who wants to be safe?

Meening not me, and pop said, Let him order for himself, it will teach him to be a man of the world.

Well then a boys eyes are not as big as his stummick, anyway, pop said.

And the waiter brawt it all in at once, not hardly leaving enough room on the table for menus and pop looked at me curious to see how soon I would get sick and trying to eat everything, and after a while he started in to get nervise, on account of me not getting tired at all, and then even asked for ester bread to use up the rest of my Irish stew gravey before I ate my 2 disserts, ice cream being 1, pop said, not the slightest impression on him and took a extra cup of coffee dinner alone cost me 2 dollers and 80 cents.

Hee hee it looks as if youre the one that learned something, William, it looks as if you lerned that a mans pocketbook is not as big as a boys stummick hee, hee ma said.

And we went home, me feeling full but not uncomfortable.

ESPLANADE VS. AUXILIARY MAIN

season. In view of this fact, the city council naturally must be expected to keep in mind the project which will give the maximum of employment to labor.

According to the figures prepared by Mr. William Storrie, the consulting engineer, who was called in to verify the figures of City Engineer Mott, the auxiliary water main will necessitate an expenditure of $35,000 on labor alone. On the esplanade proposition, he estimated that sixty per cent of the $91,000 required for the work (cost of the purchase of real estate not being included in this figure) would go to labor, which figures out at $54,900 for labor alone on the boulevard plan. At the same time it must not be forgotten that it is expected more men could be employed on the esplanade project than on the excavation for the water main. The one plan provides for $85,000 in wages, the other provides for about $54,900. How can the council contend that the water main project is preferable from the standpoint of the workingman in the light of these estimates, made by Mr. Storrie, the engineer whom the council relied upon for an independent report?

It should not be forgotten that the esplanade project is the one undertaking of the kind which will open up great opportunities for all classes of labor, not only for the urgency of the present moment, but for years to come. Every branch of labor will profit by the opportunities which lie in this proposition. It would be a shortsighted policy indeed to combine the present with the future especially when the present needs can but be met by this proposition and when the future contains so much before for real estate and for the working man in particular in the development of a new street. The future of the esplanade can be forecast with a fair amount of accuracy from the experience of other cities which for years will be engaged in construction, new assessment will come and hence new taxes will follow; there will be relief of congestion in addition to the beauty which Belleville's cramped business area and civic beautification, which surely counts for something, are other benefits not far off.

It must be remembered that the Belleville waterworks has been developing for a number of years until it is in an excellent condition. Belleville is proud of its waterworks system, its intake and particularly of its purification plant which guarantees a pure water supply. The city cannot but be proud of this utility and of the remarkable showing it has made. About $300,000 spent upon this in late years and there is a feeling that the department has been well treated. In all probability in time to the need of a new main may be felt and met but for the present, owing to the money already expended upon this utility, there is a feeling that this undertaking might well be delayed. The esplanade work is brought forward as an immediate necessity until the task of providing winter employment was brought forward and hence this would have been unable to compete with labor from this point of view. Now if a better undertaking for the moment and for the future comes in sight, why should it not be taken up? When the auxiliary main is built it will be completed from a labor standpoint, but not so with the esplanade, which means expenditures for construction of individuals, once the city opens up the property.

Returning to the esplanade proposition, let it be stated that the figures of City Engineer Mott were found correct by Mr. Storrie, who stated that Mr. Mott had suggested that the retaining wall be sunk two feet beneath the surface and be slightly thicker as an additional measure of safety, the engineer stating that it involved additional cost and advantage to labor at the moment.

It has been urged that there would be delay in getting to work if this esplanade undertaking goes forward. But there need be little or none as there is plenty of work upon the right of way to keep large gangs of men busy while the scheme is being materialized.

In regard to the city's financial status, it may be said that when the debentures waiting to be issued for the filter and also for the school additions, for sewers and so forth are taken up, there will remain an indebtedness

PUBLIC SCOLDINGS

By Constance Cameron.

I've always thought that we were wise as kind to elder people as we are to children. Why, when a person becomes more of a conviction every time I observe my own and my friends' children with other people.

It seems to me that every many times a mother administers a scolding in public to her child, not because it is necessary, but because she wouldn't otherwise wait until they reached home, but because she feels that other adult eyes are on her, other adult ears are filled with spellbound breath waiting for the reprimand to be delivered.

Well, I've had one and kind she will ignore what her pepys expect her to do, and do what she likes is just to her child. What if Mrs. Jones' boy does say, "Gee, you have spanked him right then and there!" You dont have to live with Mrs. Jones. You aren't moulding Mrs. Jones' character, you are moulding your character, the sensibilities of your child and he deserves first consideration.

Everything is new to a little child. The manner of behaving in a store is something he knows little about. The rules and regularities of a visit to friends make him feel strange and uneasy at first, because he doesn't know what's going to happen next and doesn't intuitively know what kind of advice it when it does happen. But the child is trying to do the right thing he feels is right. And he will some day learn to do it right if he knows that Mother of Dad are with him and that, and that they are not going to subject him to ridicule or anger before strangers.

Train your child to act as you'd as you would him to act before people. Then let things ride when the child is not doing exactly right. you can check upon any slips in behaviour, but do it when you are alone. Nine times out of ten you will find that the child either thought he was doing the right thing or was entirely unconscious of any breach of etiquette.

It is cruel to make him object of a scene and painful pain to strange adults and this situation if allowed to occur, often, will build up character traits which will be difficult to overcome and twice as disagreeable as anything the child may unknowingly do now.

Correct your child when you are alone with him. Don't make him take your scoldings and recriminations before an audience.

OPTIMISTIC CHORUS GROWS IN STRENGTH

Ontario Intelligencer Reporter Gathers Sayings

STAFFS LARGER

Honest Business By Employers, Merchants, Brokers

Belleville is on the path to normalcy. A national wave of general and industrial activity is enveloping the country and leaving in its wake a commodity of renewed hope, faith and expressions of heartfelt thankfulness.

For two years the country has been in mourning. People have hoarded their pennies, have lived in a rigidly economical way and have refused to buy things that they need, things that they should have had, and that would have made life easier for them if they had had them. That has helped to slow circulation of currency down and was in fact made a contributing factor towards hoarding that they wished to avoid. Now people are again taking heart. They have realized that after all the country is here and the same people and the same amount of money is in it, and they are buying again; buying radios and washing machines and furniture and carpets all made in Canada by Canadian workmen who are fast being recalled back to work. Wheat is jumping to new, higher levels. Stocks are gaining strength daily; the industries report gains in almost all lines and closer home, very many industries in Belleville are increasing production week by week. Larger city contemporaries have "smashing columns"—flaunt scare heads all over the front page and grow more joyously optimistic day by day. Surely there must be, somewhere, a foundation to this enthusiasm.

The Daily Ontario Intelligencer is and always has been conservative, perhaps ultra-conservative, but even after looking at figures and facts which were brought in black and white this paper is able to join in the enthusiasm which is so contagious and rendered more plausible by realization of fact. After a week's study and an exhaustive survey of this, the immediate district, one is forced to admit, that things have changed for the better and are changing week by week. "What are the facts and how?" we asked, and we set out to see.

"Business has turned the corner, and in fact some lines are almost normal records," say some merchants on Front street.

Best Week's Trade

"Last week's sales were the best we have had for over a year," says one of the brothers of a mid-town clothing store.

"I never have yet allowed myself to be quoted publicly; running another merchant, everyone knows, but I'll tell you this confidentially: my sales sheets have showed a gain for two months now."

"You can quote me to the effect that business in my estimation is improving noticeably, and that the recent advance in the price of wheat has heartened everybody," conservatively states Mr. G. A. C. Weir, president of the Bankers' Clearing House Association.

"The despised word 'depression' has never been in my vocabulary and is rapidly being forced into the discard by everyone else owing to the steady increase of my own and other companies," says Mr. Twist, of the local plant of the American Hardware Corporation.

And so it goes.

Our sales are now steadily and consistently increasing," claims the Sanders speaking for the Sargent Lock Manufacturing Company.

And from the Stewart Warner, Alemite and Clarke Carter Company, Mr. Young, in the absence of Mr. Rowsome, who is away in Chicago, summing up more business comes the word: "Our stuff was there."

Hard Headed Answers

There are lots more of them, and could fill up the whole sheet with the encouraging answers the chronicler received. The question was a simple question as to present business condition, and the answers were there to be taken. Honest answers, answers perhaps tinctured with a little of the optimism they felt, but answers from hard working hard headed business men who knew the subject they were handling. We'll confess that they were the answers we wanted, like a small boy wants to know encouraging reports on the speed of the engine which is hauling a circus train to town—but not the answers we expected to get so unanimously and whole heartedly, from all the merchants and manufacturers and the rest.

So we see although Belleville has her registration list of unemployed, and her relief committee, and her social problems—she also has her usual quota of pessimists who have used the prevailing slump as an excuse to hoard pennies and cry hard times.

The men are being taken off the street corners and put to work; the pay envelope, missed for so long, will soon be in evidence again and things will clear up. They always have before and this is her the country—we have ever had. The city is awakening up, stretching and preparing to go back to work again, but it won't all happen in a week or two weeks—still it will happen.

Have faith in Belleville, Buy in Belleville what you need. Boost Belleville.

"We've tracked down and exterminated that word we won't use again, with facts and figures. Now size can we do—or what else can we do for those who still disbelieve?

HUNGERFORD BARN, FARM HOUSE BURNED

Robert H. Brady Suffer Loss of Season's Crop

HORSES RESCUED

Second Time That Family Burned Out in 12 Years

Their barn catching fire at three o'clock on Wednesday morning, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Brady, of the 11th concession of Hungerford on the Glen Lewis Road, and their sons were aroused from sleep and tried to effect the saving of some of the contents. They were unable to prevent the flames making such headway that their residence also took fire and was burned to the ground. As the farm house and barn are not the only other residences few neighbors knew of the fire.

From the barn a team of horses was rescued, but the cattle were safe in the field. In the barn was the season's produce as well as crops which had been hauled into the barn from another farm which Mr. Brady operated the past season.

From the house some of the contents were saved.

Mr. and Mrs. Brady lost their home some ten or twelve years ago by fire but had rebuilt.

EARL FOUND DEAD., LYING ON LAWN

Redland, Fla., Nov. 3—The body of Baron Charles Ernest Alfred French Somerset Butler, 34, seventh Earl of Carrick and former comptroller of the Lord Lieutenant's household of Ireland, was found on the lawn of his home here.

Two physicians who examined the body said death occurred Monday afternoon only 24 hours before the body was found by J. B. T. McElroy, a friend, beside a lawn mower. Dr. M. D. Hartman and Dr. J. A. Smith, who conducted the examination, said death was caused by apoplexy apparently induced by over-exertion, while mowing the lawn.

Cambridge University has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon Lord Rinder-Powell, world chief of the Boy Scouts.

FELLOWSHIPS TO BE CREATED

Due to Generosity of Carnegie Corp. to Royal Society

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 5 (CP)—Through the generosity of the Carnegie corporation in setting apart $75,000 for the purpose, the Royal Society of Canada has been enabled to create ten annual fellowships each of the value of $1,500 for a period of five years. The council of the society met this week in Ottawa under the chairmanship of Sir Robert Falconer when a draft of the regulations for the fellowships was submitted and will be further considered.

These fellowships are designed to encourage among young Canadians of exceptional ability and promise the enjoyment of research in the advancement of human knowledge. They will be open on equal terms to men and women, and will enable them to carry on special work in their particular field at world-famous institutions in various parts of the world.

Generally speaking a candidate will be expected to have obtained the Degree of Master of Arts, or its equivalent, or preferably to have completed a year's work beyond that degree. The fellowships will be open to students in each of the natural sciences as well as in history, anthropology, political economy, sociology and allied subjects, in French as well as in English.

The awarding of fellowships will be in the hands of a board created by the Royal Society of Canada from among the members and will be governed by the regulations that are now in preparation. It is hoped that arrangements may be completed so that the first of these royal fellowships may be awarded in 1932.

The council is also planning for an appropriate celebration next year on the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Royal Society.

Royal Templars Lodge Brought Into I. O. F.

Messrs. Geo. A. Mitchell and Thos. Robertson of Toronto, assistant Supreme Chief Ranger of I.O.F., accompanied by Messrs. Frank E.G. Toronto, and J. O. Herity, Belleville, Past High Chief Rangers, were in Deseronto Wednesday evening to receive the Royal Templars Lodge of Deseronto into the Independent Order of Foresters. The Foresters absorbed the Royal Templars and took over their assets on July 31 of this year and now the process of amalgamation is being carried out with the individual lodges. Deseronto had a flourishing Royal Templars Lodge of over sixty members, all of whom now become Foresters. Officers were elected and Mr. Edgar Irwin, who had been for the past twenty years, the head of the Royal Templars in Deseronto, was elected Chief Ranger of the newly formed court. The officers were installed by assistant Supreme Ranger Mitchell after which addresses of congratulatory nature were made by the visiting brethren. At the close of the lodge an enjoyable banquet was served and a very pleasant social time filled in the balance of the evening.

OUTLAWS OF EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

She nodded.

"I would be glad to entertain a proposition to buy that land from you, Miss Lorry. As agricultural land it is worthless, as grazing land it is very poor, but as a hunting and fishing preserve it is excellent. I know a man who would be willing to pay you a fair price for that land."

"How much?"

"Well, I'm pretty certain I can unload it on him at ten dollars an acre. I'd expect you to sell to me for nine, of course. I've got to have a profit."

"And if I agree, to sell to you at that price, what?"

"That will enable you to take up your father's unsecured notes and rehabilitate your credit at this bank. In return I'll renew your mortgage for three years."

"At six per cent?" she insisted.

"Can't possibly," he defended. "Is that your final decision, Mr. Babson?"

"Absolutely so. I dislike to appear harsh, but business is business and if I permit sentiment to enter—"

"Please spare me your stereotyped and hypocritical meanderings," the girl interrupted acidly. "I am not a fool and I see through you as if you were a window. Admit a satisfaction of mortgage, sign it before a notary public and give it to me. In return I will give you a bank cashier's check for the exact amount of your father's unsecured notes, marked 'Paid,' and you shall have another bank cashier's check for the amount of them, with interest. There are the checks"—and she tossed them on the table—"re-him.

He stared at the min frank amazement. "Why, where did you get all that money? he demanded.

"That's none of your business, sir. You called upon my father to pay up in five days or stand suit. He's dead, but I'm obeying orders. Your bluff is called. Unless you ever run a blazer on the Kershaw clan you get away with it. And you were trying to run a blazer, you know. Tried to ave me into buying you that land of mine."

He was undaunted. "Do you mean to tell me you refuse the fine offer I have just made you?"

"I do. I'd rather give the land away than sell it to you."

His fed from her stormy presence and in about fifteen minutes Henry Rookby pussy-footed in and handed her the cancelled evidence of her father's indebtedness.

Mr. Rookby's eyes were round with wonder and resentment as he watched her climb into her battered old car at the curb and roll out Valley Centre Boulevard in the direction of Cedar Ridge. Then she was going to the county seat to attend the auction of the delinquent tax property. "Gee whiz!" he said to Babson. "She's got the money, certainly one salty damsel, eh, chief?"

"She's a devil, Henry—a she-devil on wheels," said the wild Kershaws rolled into one—and I'm a star-spangled Jackass with brains enough to pound sand in a hole."

At three o'clock he went home, suffering form a violent headache, the direct result of futile rage. But he was not at all in danger of a nervous collapse now, for the fight was in the open at last and he drew a subtle comfort from that knowledge. He knew now where Lorry Kershaw had gotten all that money! Unquestionably he had shot and killed that mysterious power company, which, he was routed in the home end of the Pan, but he would go to Sacramento and there would arise and give the Handle. And, despite the fact that his alternative proposition would save the district the cost of erecting a huge impounding dam, Babson would gladly have welcomed it, for it carried risks and almost the certainty of expensive law suits which might so delay surface irrigation in Fortuna Valley as to bankrupt the Bank of Valley Centre, even though at the last the valley should win the fight.

INSTALMENT XI

Wade Thomond was at the Circle K headquarters when Lorry Kershaw came in that night from her visit to Cedar Run.

"Welcome, stranger," she greeted him, as she drove up. "Come and help me admire my new car."

He came and looked the new car over soberly. "Aren't you a little bit reckless and improvident for a girl in your financial fix?" he demanded gravely.

"You talk like Silas Babson," she retorted gaily.

"I'm not objecting, Lorry, but I greatly fear this new car will be regarded by Babson as an extravagance; it's bound to hurt your credit."

"Nuts, Silas Babson can take a jump into Eden Valley Creek for all I care. I'm all stumbled up with him and his bank."

"No?" he cried, simulating amazement. "Indeed?"

"I've sold my four thousand acres below the mill to Uncle Sam for $40 for four thousand dollars—cash! And I've cleaned up Babson and his little red brick bank and have a hundred thousand dollars working capital left."

"Then God's in His heaven and all's well with the world. But why did you sell your land and keep the impounding dam a secret from me? Somebody wants to put a dam in the gorge and they needed your land for the reservoir. You know very well the Bar H owns the damsite; if we'd worked together we could both have sold, but now that they have your land they have a terrific advantage over me."

"But you're a low-flung manoeuvrer, Thomond, to suppose I'd leave you holding the sack. I told that man I wouldn't sell for a million dollars unless they secured your dam-site first."

"I suspected the sort of girl you are, Lorry, but I wanted to make certain. Forgive my little deceit. I took the liberty of deciding to sell your land and naming the price to the Mountain Valley Power Company. I would never have sold my dam-site to that corporation until assured there would be no argument with you over the price of your land. Did Babson try to trade you out of your land today?"

She related to him in detail her interview with the banker.

"I should say you gave Babson a push under the heart. How did he assimilate it?"

"As if his world was crashing about him. Perhaps I should not have attacked him with such ferocity, but I have a temper, Wade, and when a lying, scheming, hypo-critic al, cold-hearted snake like Silas Babson crosses my trail I like to shoot his head off."

Wade smiled approvingly. He liked the fire in her. Here was no shady-woman, clinging vine of a girl, dependent, selfish and sex-conscious. Here was a woman who made her own conduct like unto that of a very gallant gentleman.

She laughed, walking around her new car and admiring it.

He carried of smooth two-year-old steers, averaging ten hundred and fifty pounds, sold for seven cents to Union Stockyards in Los Angeles today."

"Things are certainly looking up for old Rancho Kershaw's girl."

She turned on him with shining eyes. "How did you get the news so quickly?"

"My valet has a portable radio."

"Your what?"

"My valet."

"Oh, Nate, I'm ashamed of you. A great, big, strong man like you, with all your hands and legs and arms and teeth! A valet!! I knew you had a chauffeur, which is bad enough, but you've kept the valet in hiding."

"Ah, Nate, you're a dear. I did thought Eden Valley would be unbearably lonely when dad left me but it isn't."

"I had thought the same thing with respect to myself. It wasn't my plan to remain here more than a week—"

"But you're not going away so soon?"

"Why not? I've completed my business—all except renewing the lease on the Bar H to the Kershaw Estate, for which purpose I have to pose you desire to renew the lease?"

"Just because you know I have a hundred thousand dollars on hand you want thirty thousand of it." With this light banter she shove back the shock his announcement had given her. "Of course you have a renewal. When are you leaving, Nate?"

"Tomorrow morning. Will you drive this shiny new car over to Gold Run tomorrow, lunch with me there and see me off on my journey?"

She shook her raven head. "No, Nate, I think not. Partings are sad deaths—and we start our calf-brand tomorrow. There are only two men on the payroll who can rope a steer by the hind legs and drag him to the fire. The others are cowboys —neck-ropers; so I have to make a hit at the branding myself. Got to get the branding done quickly."

His face brightened. "If you'll give me a good horse and a rata I'll stay over a few days and help you. It's so long since I've worked a branding corral—and I ought to keep my hand in."

"Why, I'll be glad to the running board of Lorry's new car and chatter with Mrs. Tenney called them in to dinner, serve which she is currently retired to the kitchen. For a time Lorry was quiet. Then, with the impetuosity of her nature she suddenly returned to the subject nearest her heart.

"Why do you have to go away, Nate?"

"Got a couple of deals on and I can't handle them from here."

"If you're coming back in the fall," she suggested, "you should have the Bar H place put in order. The house is little decay; it smells neglected. It isn't fit for anyone to live in, even with capable servants."

"I had thought of that, indeed; it's one of the reasons I have to leave Eden Valley. Got to engage an architect to draw plans for a new house, new barns, four-car garage, kennels, and such. Got to establish a smart gardener to put in a nice lawn around the new house and plant flowers. Got to grade a new graveled road from the main county highway to the ranch house and plant a number of trees. And I wish you'd sort of superintend the job while I'm away. And when the house is finished I'd be delighted to. If you'd run down to San Francisco and buy the furnishings for it."

GAS PIPE BREAK CAUSED INJURY

Montreal, Nov. 5.—An explosion of gasoline in the gas piping system of Stanislaus Holoks, five of them injured. According to police investigation, Holoks was digging a well in the cellar of his home and struck a gas pipe, the fumes from which filled the house.

Early today it was reported that the wife Holoks and his wife were dying and the five children were in a serious condition. The two-storey dwelling was partially destroyed, with damage estimated at $2,000.

TELLS STORY OF DISASTER

Capt. H. Robson Relates Conditions on arrival in Port

MONTREAL—How Capt. H. W. Robson, commander of the Canadian National steamship connector, broke the rules and had his wife on the ship after she had been rescued from the Belize disaster, is told in a letter to his daughter, Mrs. E. Ellis, a thrilling document, which also shows how the ship mastered the people of Belize following the damage that was wrought by the hurricane and the accompanying tidal wave.

Captain Robson has written as follows:

"The voyage from Jamaica to Belize, September 9 to 13, was made in comparatively fine weather although it is the worst time of the year, but I knew by wireless reports there was a hurricane in the vicinity of Belize, so was not surprised on arrival to find no pilot at the station.

"I found the town a total wreck, not one house or building that was not severely damaged, and very few remaining. Lighters were sent to her had, coastal boats and two hundred ton iron barges being lifted up and carried to the centre of the town. This necessitated the use of the ship's boats for the discharging of our cargo.

"The shortage of food was the main thing so I put the ship's cooks on night and day baking and they have sent nearly one thousand pounds ashore. Here, I may say, I had a hard job for homeless people, to have a bath and a meal, the shortage of water being a serious item, as Belize depends entirely upon rain water for their necessities and most of the vats were washed away. I cut down the meals to soup and biscuits and cheese with an occasional slice of meat.

"The Connector was the first ship to arrive after the disaster and was like a fairy princess to the people and ance in relieving the suffering.

"My own casualties were also appalling conditions at Belize, scarcely a house standing and out of a total population of 10,000 there were about 2,000 dead and many more badly wounded. Burial of the dead being impossible, fires were burning night and day, burning the dead.

"My own home is devastated, I have lost everything but by a miracle my wife has been saved. The water completely filled the lower part of our house and was up, and my wife was in the bedroom, and my wife was up to her neck in water struggling through the wreckage to save herself.

"I have kept her on the ship, and brought her to Jamaica, and I feel sure the company, considering the circumstances, will not look upon this with disapproval." There is a strict ruling against wives on (wartime connector normal conditions).

"The kind wave that followed the hurricane caused much of the damages and loss of life.

"I would like to be fair to conclude this letter without drawing to your attention the admirable way in which the entire ship's crew worked during this most trying time, and especially my Belize sailors, all of whom had lost some member of their family, as well as their property. These men were most faithful and loyal to the ship, which I noticed throughout the day to go ashore at night and try and repair their homes, but to a man, they always reported for duty at 6 a.m."

GRAIN SUPPLY FOR OVERSEAS

MONTREAL, Nov. 5—Samples of this year's Western Canada grain are now being distributed abroad by British and European traders, will partly be based, have reached Montreal from Winnipeg and will be shipped immediately to most of the British and continental ports of call.

The samples were prepared at the office of the chief grain inspector at Winnipeg and are contained in sealing, close-woven bags.

FIXED VALUE OF GRAPES

OTTAWA, Nov. 5.—The Minister of National Revenue, Hon. E. B. Ryckman, has removed the fixed valuation for duty purposes imposed on importations of grapes on Sept. 19. The withdrawal of this seasonal practise to offset dumping became effective today.

ARMORED CARS USED TO TRANSPORT BOOKS

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Books so very valuable they must travel from New York by armored van are being taken from the Pierpont Morgan library to spare Memorial through dozen specially guarded. Both books and memorial building, a modern architectural gem beside the library of Congress, are the gift of the late Henry C. Pulter, of New York, to scholars of the United States.

Rare first folios and quartos number-ing 300 arrived recently and they will continue to come until the 75,000 volume collection is complete. The world's greatest gathering of Shakespeariana. The strict surveillance which guards them, from theft also makes possible that Folger's lifetime hobby be carried to completion as quickly as he acquired his books. Few items are collected until a short time before his death.

Although the interior is complete in its decorations to the tiny oft-repeated harp motif that signifies the bard.

The landscaping is set as completely as though the shrubbery and lawns "had been growing for years. Three of the nine sculptured panels over doors of the Memorial's spears's plays are done. Curtains of rose hung, and the rich red interior of the reading room is set.

The memorial won't be opened for months. Until the public exhibition, librarians and decorators will work through the winter so that the library may be opened next spring with the formality that signifies the slim de luxe volume, privately printed in 1903 by order of Congress. The memorial to Folger's death June 11, 1930, is the only thing that has delayed behind those closed doors. Rarest of Shakespeariana treasures.

"The greatest prize" was said to be the unique Titus Andronicus of 1594, bought from a Swedish nobleman in Sweden in 1904 and purchased by Folger in 1905 for $5,000. It was valued by him later at ten times that sum.

"Dearest to Folger's heart" was the First Folio, one of the first folio, of which he owned eighty copies among the extant. "Most precious book in the world," in Folger's opinion, was the honor ascribed to the first folio of Hamlet also discovered in a dusty coach house in Scotland in 1901. Another complete surprise to scholars" was the promise Folio, copies of great actors.

The place of the memorial in Washington is between the Capitol and the Library of Congress, and the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial. He gave it to the people of the United States history.

Mr. Folger himself was indicated in sketches and data to repose in the marble temple that will rise in the Washington hill-spiritual presence will overshadow it." Dr. S. Parker Gilbert, friend of Folger's funeral.

BRITAIN IS U. S. BEST CUSTOMER

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—The United Kingdom purchased Canada as this country's best customer in September, purchasing $34,589,020 in goods, as against $28,901,853 for the Dominion.

Official import figures, however show sharp declines from the same month last year. Imports from United Kingdom took $57,945,532 and Canada $39,717,346 in shipments.

Imports from Great Britain were $13,379,313 in September, compared with $17,717,363 and from Canada $21,957,618 against $22,522,473.

FIRST NIGHT UNDER HYDRO

KINGSTON, Nov. 5.—Last night the Hydro-Electric power to supply the village of Bath and vicinity was switched on for the first time. Bath is one of the municipalities served by Hydro. Mayor George C. Wright, members of the Kingston Public Utilities Commission, A. C. Hanley electrical inspector, and other officials from Kingston attended the ceremonies.

PETERBORO, Nov. 5.—An unanimous call to the Rev. Dr. A. T. Barr of Brantford was extended by Bond Street Presbyterian congregation, Peterboro, at a meeting held in the church. The congregation has been vacant since April, 1, due to the transfer of Rev. William Allan to Dovercourt Road church, Toronto. The call carries a stipend of $3,500, with free manse and four weeks' holidays.

FAKE LABELS SELL MODELS

Paris Raid Discloses Counterfeits of Famous Dressmakers

PARIS, Nov. 5 — Bootleg dress manufacturers recently discovered that cloth labels are an easy fake as the counterfeit labels on genuine gin bottles, but the French secret police today were able to announce the dissolution of a ring that has threatened to destroy the fashionable trade of Paris.

Fifty thousand fake labels were discovered in the wardrobe of a firm in the Rue Saint- Sauveur, Paris. They were designed for distribution to clothing buyers throughout the world. Among the names counterfeited were those of the world-famous houses of Worth, Jenny, Paloa, Molyneux and Chanel.

The discovery was made after an investigation by a fashion protective organization aided by Mr. Legrand, police commissioner for the Champs Elysees district. In a number of cases the names of the labels had been altered by a letter or two to evade a charge of forgery. Thus Paloa became "Paloi," and Molyneux became "Maulyneux." In many of the cases the were exact duplicates of the originals.

The police discovered that for five years the Paris factory at Rue Richelieu has been manufacturing false labels. Another one at Paris printed them on ribbons. The trademarks were then given to agents, who affixed them to cheap dresses and then sold the garments at fabulous prices.

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 14. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Before them, directly in the middle of the path, stood "El Adrea," the black lion. His green eyes glowed very wicked as he bared his teeth and lashed his sides with his angry tail. Then he roared—that terror-inspiring roar of the hungry lion. "Your knife," said Tarzan to the girl. "Quick."

As his fingers closed on the hilt, Tarzan pushed the girl behind him, bidding her stay there. "It is useless," she replied resignedly. "This is the end!" No the ape-man stood, half crouching, his knife ready in the moonlight. The lion sprang. Agile and lightning-quick, Tarzan leaped aside.

Amazed the watching girl was transfixed at the sane with which Tarzan eluded the great paws. And now—Oh, Allah!—he had rushed behind "El Adrea's" shaggy and grained it by the mane, before the lion could even turn! The great beast reared upon its hind legs. Tarzan knew it would do this—and was ready!

A giant arm encircled the black-maned throat. A dozen times a sharp blade darted in and out behind its shoulder. When Tarzan of the Apes at last released his hold and arose, the lion was dead. Then the daughter of the desert witnessed a thing that dertified her even more than the presence of "El Adrea."

FINANCIAL NEWS

IMPROVEMENT IN FINANCIAL SYSTEM SHOWN

Past Month Sees Growth in Strength of Structure

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 5 (CP) — The Canadian business situation has been strengthened during the last month," says the Monthly Commercial letter of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, "while production and activity in several major industries declined, partly as a result of seasonal factors, this was over-balanced by gains in certain lines of business, and by increased price movements in some agricultural products, which are more than offset losses in others and there is also to be taken into account the recent effect on business generally that may be expected as a result of the recent elections in Great Britain."

The letter continues: "Railway freight traffic improved in the October over the preceding month, consequent upon the crop delivery in the Prairie Provinces and the contributions of season factors in the general public.

"The stability in Canadian exchange conditions in New York during recent weeks appears to be due not only to large sales of Canadian goods in the United States, but also to the increase in the floating supply in this section of this letter, together with the movement of Canadian securities by large American concerns which have business connections in this country, and to an influx of American funds. The latter factors are suggestive of a change in the financial people who have knowledge of Canada."

SHARP ADVANCE ON GRAIN BOARD

Early Purchases Send November Futures to High Peak

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 5 (CP) — Sharp advances were registered in wheat prices on the Winnipeg grain exchange this morning, early morning purchases sent November and December futures to the high levels of session Monday, while May shot up to even a higher peak. The gains were largely maintained by the current future.

November was advanced 1¼ to 1¼ while December gained 1¾ to 1¾ at 78 to 78¼. Most May was up 1¾ to 1 at 78 to 75¾.

WHEAT HOLDS SHARP GAINS

Market Active and Good Volume of Buying in Evidence

CHICAGO, Ills., Nov. 5.—The sensational advance in wheat values continued at the opening of the Chicago market today. The first quotations were from much as 1¾ cents higher than yesterday's close. May continued to show the 70 cent mark for the first time this season.

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov. 5.—(By the Canadian Press)—Tenaciously holding sharp gains registered at opening of session, wheat prices had fractionally added to values at the noon hour on a scale from ¼ to 1 change here today. November was quoted at 77 3-4, and advance of 3-8 cents; December at 72 1-8 showed a rise of 1-2 cent; May at 78 cents gained 1 3-4 cents.

The market was very active and a good volume of buying in evidence was in evidence. The buying came chiefly from commission houses, seaboard and eastern accounts. A good commercial export trade was reported but at noon no figures were available.

Unexpected strength at Liverpool was responsible for a break upward from 1 2-8 cents to 1 3-8 cents. May at 76 to 75 3-8 touched the highest points registered by the current future.

MACDONALD STILL HEADS BRITISH GOV'T

Baldwin Lord President of Council, List Announced

SNOWDEN IN

Sir John Simon, Liberal Leader, is Foreign Secretary

LONDON, Nov. 5.—(AP)—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald remains head of the British Government in the new cabinet, with Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin Lord President of the Council and Rt. Hon. Neville Chamberlain as Chancellor of the Exchequer, succeeding Rt. Hon. Philip Snowden.

The cabinet list was announced at No. 10 Downing Street this evening. Sir John Simon, one of the country's greatest lawyers and leader of one wing of the Liberal party which broke away from Rt. Hon. David Lloyd George, is foreign secretary.

Mr. Snowden, who retired from the cabinet at his own request because of his failing health, remains in the cabinet as Lord Privy Seal.

Walter Runciman was named President of the Board of Trade, an appointment which was regarded as Mr. MacDonald's attempt to balance the Conservative tariff preferences with Liberal support and to open up that issue.

Other appointments included:

Sir H. Hilton Young, Conservative, Minister of Health.

Sir Godfrey Collin Russell, Conservative, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Sir Donald MacLean, Liberal, Minister of Education.

Sir Henry Betterton, Conservative, Minister of Labor.

Williams Coates-Gore, Conservative, First Commissioner of Works.

Lord Hailsham, Conservative, Secretary of War.

The most surprising appointment in the list was that of Sir John Simon to the Foreign Office. It was known that Lord Reading had indicated his willingness to relinquish theport, and it was generally expected that Sir John would receive one of the more important ambassadorships, but his name had not been mentioned in connection with the Foreign Office.

New Secretary for Air is Marquis of Londonderry, Conservative; Sir Archibald Sinclair, Liberal, Secretary for Scotland.

Neville Chamberlain is one of the strong tariff group.

In making the appointments, Mr. MacDonald let it be known he tried to maintain the National character of the cabinet and that not at the same time make as few changes in the old cabinet as all ses.

The cabinet, somewhat larger than the Socialist government, to succeed the Labor government, consists of twenty members of whom eleven are Conservatives, five are Liberals of one wing or another, and four are members of the National Labor Party.

GUY FAWKES DAY OBSERVED

Formal Search of Parliament Buildings Made

(By Thomas T. Champion C.P. Special Correspondent)

London, Eng., Nov. 5—Today is Guy Fawkes day. Visitors to London from afar doubtless have been surprised the last few days at being greeted on the streets by the sight of street urchins carrying a most primitive effigy of a man propelled by a perambulator, or a go-cart. Others have been still more surprised to learn that countless ritual bonfires direct attention to the celebration of ancient ceremonials attending the opening of parliament.

Before the new parliament met last Thursday the sergts at the House of Parliament was searched as usual by members of the Yeomen of the Guard, arrayed in their quaint tudor uniforms. It so happens this latest parliament of George V. assembles the same week as the 250th anniversary of the assembling of parliament by James I, when Guy Fawkes and his confederates plotted to blow up the House of Lords and Commoners together, having hired a cellar beneath the house of Parliament and filled it with barrels of gunpowder. Fawkes was arrested, tried, condemned and under torture confessed in the tower of London, revealed the names of his fellow conspirators.

The marching today of the vaults of parliament is a reminder of the plot which, almost three centuries ago, Parliament, which then sought destruction, decreed November 5 should be observed thereafter as a National Day of Thanksgiving. For over two centuries this was followed.

November 5 Parliament Hall November 5 with satisfaction for the annual meeting with a bonfire and the letting off of fireworks either in their own or some neighbor's back garden.

MRS. ZAVITZ HOME MISSION BOARD HEAD

47th Annual Meeting is Held at Victoria Ave. Church

COLLEGE REPORT

Interesting Story of Mission Result Told By John Cristea

Commencing yesterday for their forty-seventh annual meeting, delegates to the Women's Baptist Home Missionary Society of Ontario West received Mission work done in Canada by the Association this year. The meeting was held in Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, and very large numbers are present to heard with interest encouraging reports on the work accomplished throughout Canada.

An important part of yesterday's programme was the election of officers and members of the Home Mission Board which is now composed as follows:

Honorary Members—Mrs. Edward Burns, Toronto, Mrs. W. T. Graham, Toronto.

President—Mrs. F. J. Zavitz, Toronto.

1st Vice President—Mrs. D. C. Jones, Toronto.

2nd Vice President—Mrs. John Mutell, Toronto.

Secretary—Mrs. O. B. Oumans, Toronto.

Board Members—Mrs. J. C. Cornell, Toronto, Mrs. A. Beddick, Toronto, Mrs. R. D. Long, Kitchener, Mrs. J. E. Saint, Toronto, Mrs. H. Campbell, Toronto, Mrs. Hickman, Toronto, Mrs. M. P. McDonald, Toronto, Mrs. J. D. Stevenson, Toronto, Mrs. J. A. Huntley, Hamilton, Mrs. W. J. Stichbold, Toronto.

Mrs. R. Cummer and the directors of the various Associations convening reported on work in the individual districts and the morning session was brought to a close by a "Quiet Hour" conducted by Mrs. J. D. Simons, Indian Road Baptist Church, Toronto, "Power Through Consecration" was the theme of Mrs. Simon's devotional talk.

The interesting programme was arranged for the afternoon session of the Society, Mrs. D. G. Jones, of Toronto was in the chair and the meeting opened with a devotional period in charge of Mrs. W. W. Richmond, who spoke words of inspiration on the topic of "Power for Service."

Girls' College.

Miss Marjorie Trotter, principal of Moulton College for Girls, Toronto, was a speaker during the afternoon. Miss Trotter gave brilliant glimpses of life and work in the College, and of endeavours being this institution of learning should be considered the ideal thing of schools for girls—the fact that it was a small college secured individual attention to the particular need of the student; the fact that it was a Christian college prepared its graduates to take their place in the world with a thoroughly religious background.

Miss Forstan of Belleville delighted the audience with a vocal solo, accompanied by Mrs. Sawyer.

In her address "Your Girls Translated Mean Souls for Christ" Mrs. W. Greenslade showed how Missionary funds for work in Canada expended the opportunities of the Society. She pointed the work in the West, in Quebec through the Mission at Grande Ligne, of the seal in the Mission zones, of Ontario itself, where in many cases the ardent labours of students during summaries were overcoming all obstacles. To illustrate her remarks a bridge was built of pegs blocks on which was marked the sum of money used for the various home mission fields. She urged prayer and more prayer on the part of members in order that missionaries would accomplish great wonders in the future.

An interesting visitor at the Convention was Rev. John Cristea of East Windsor. This young man, ordained to the ministry last spring at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky, conducts in his mission in East Windsor, Sunday services in three languages, Rumanian, Hungarian and English. He was born in Roala-Serbia, Rumania, where that part of the territory belonged to Austria.

Addressing the meeting in afternoon, Rev. Mr. Cristea told of his early life in his native country. When he was eight years of age, a neighbor, a Baptist, lost her only son and struck by the resemblance of John Cristea to her little one, she begged his mother to allow him to go to church with her. She was allowed to go by the mother who explained that they had their own religion. One day an invitation was given and the little boy was taken to church and Sunday School.

"I accepted Christ", said the speaker. "I saw the truth and was inspired to tell the story of Jesus to my mother and father. I started to preach the Gospel in my home, and although for five years my mother would not listen to my message, my triumph was great when my efforts were crowned with triumph. At fifteen years of age I felt a higher ambition—to tell the story of Jesus to others.

Rumania's Need

"At this time the Transylvania became the property of Rumania which has a state church the Greek Orthodox Church. There is no greater curse than the State Church, for the people need freedom and worship the priest but never worship God. The Baptist churches throughout the country were closed and we were prosecuted. I was a young minister and because I tried to tell the story of Jesus to others I was put in jail. I was called in the papers, a Bolshevist. The effect of persecution on me was to make me realize as I never had before the significance of the old, rugged cross, and its effect on our religion was to make it grow.

"Rumania needs God. The world needs God for hate is rife and can only be eliminated by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The League of Nations without Christianity to back it up can not accomplish what it wishes. What is needs is first, realization of the Fatherhood of God, then the brotherhood of man. The world can only find peace and become in harmony as it learns to know God."

Present Sketch

Presenting the importance of the Missionary publication, "The Link and Visitor" in a vocal solo, a very sketch entitled "The Linking Visitor" was given by members of one of our missionaries in Japan.

Mrs. Bush rendered very sweetly a solo "I Have Been Alone With Jesus." Mrs. Hall gave Chapter 1 of the Study Book, entitled "Korea, The Land of the Dawn," explaining the significance for Korea being called the land of the Dawn. She also told much of the history as a nation. This was given in a very interesting manner.

This part of the meeting closed with a hymn and Prayer.

A dainty lunch was then served Those assisting were Mrs. Waddell, Mrs. Turkey, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Hogle, all members of group 9.

Poet's Corner

LITTLE SUMMER

Musical is the rustling of the leaves falling, falling . . .
Like the gentle singing
And joy, in the fountain of my heart
Upspringing,
Wells, crystal clear, at the sweet and delicate calling
Of a linnet
As if in spring time, in the autumn Songs out of season, with colour in smoke are shining
From the shrine of my heart, and the tree where the linnet is swaying;
Fleeting together;
Fugitive words set to music, dulcet appealing.
—Brenda Murray Drayer, in the Glasgow Herald.

Mr. William Bostum, of Catherine St., left yesterday for the deer country north of Bobcaygeon, where he and some fourteen others in the party will stay at the former's lodge.

Dr. Ward and Mr. Hamilton, of Foxboro, have also left for the north.

The Women's Missionary Society of Holloway Street United Church held its regular meeting on Wednesday afternoon in the church parlors with seventy ladies in attendance. The meeting was opened with Mrs. Leonard Bell, Mrs. Leonard Ball, Mrs. F. Reid acting secretary in the absence of Mrs. McCall. The meeting opened with a hymn followed by a Scripture reading by Mrs. Hogle, Mrs. Neal led in prayer.

The minutes of the last meeting —reports of secretaries and business were then dealt with. Mrs. Wickett and Mrs. Stewart, Straun's Secretaries, reported the work had been done. The Thank offering was then received after which an offertory hymn was sung. Mrs. Denton leader of Group 8, took charge of the remainder of the program. A hymn was sung. Mrs. Mason read the devotional paper for the day, which dealt with the life and the work of Dr. John, Disciple of Jesus. Mrs. Beal took the temperance paper. Mrs. Denton then introduced the speaker for the afternoon, Mrs. Sweetman. Mrs. Sweetman is a very bright and delightful manner told of the work of Miss Norie, B.A., one of our missionaries in Japan.

Mrs. Bush rendered very sweetly a solo "I Have Been Alone With Jesus." Mrs. Hall gave Chapter 1 of the Study Book, entitled "Korea, The Land of the Dawn," explaining the significance for Korea being called the land of the Dawn. Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beekman
Correct Bridal Attire

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

1. A friend of mine was recently married. She wore a bright blue chiffon dress and a white bille veil and carried a bouquet of bride's roses. Will you please tell me if she should not have worn the colored dress without a veil, or a white dress with the veil?

2. The groom wore a very dark blue business suit. Was this correct?

They were married at home at four o'clock in the afternoon.

I will certainly appreciate seeing your answer as it will possibly prevent others from making such a show of bad taste, or am I wrong?

3. Is my signature correct for this type of letter?

Reader.

1. I cannot help thinking that your friend did get a bit confused in her combination. If she wished to have her wedding register "form ality", then she should have worn white dress, a bridal dress, and the white tulle veil. But then, of course, the ceremony would have been formal clothes too, consistent, appropriate, with the formality suggested by her attire. The bride's attire, of course, always is the indication of the formality of the wedding.

2. On the other hand, she wished to have her wedding regarded as informal, she would have appropriately worn the blue chiffon dress with a matching hat. Then the groom's dark blue business suit would have been proper.

However, my heart always goes out sincerely to the girl who has always dreamed of wearing a veil at her wedding, and does wear it, even though she has not thought very deeply about the appropriateness of the veil for her attire and with the general plans for her wedding. I find it very difficult to criticise her. There's always the question of expense, and there is always the question of appropriateness—but life is like that, and these problems must be considered.

3. As I suggested above, when the bride wears a bridal veil, the groom should wear formal clothes —cutaway coat and dark striped trousers for the day wedding, and evening clothes, tail coat, for the evening wedding.

3. Yes, your signature is correct. Of course, I would like it better if you do not use initials for the middle name of your informal name and for the middle name of your formal name. If the P stands for the last name of your maiden name, why not write it in full—or omit it?

Personal Invitation

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

1. Recently a cousin of mine was married, and instead of issuing printed invitations, the bride's mother called on each guest and asked them personally. Is this considered good form and is it correct?

2. The bride also wore a pale blue hat and dress at an eight o'clock wedding in the evening. Was this proper?

Worried.

The answer to both of these questions is "yes", since apparently the wedding was a small and informal one. As a matter of fact, I think that the bride's mother's calling in each of the relatives and friends to be invited to the wedding was an especially charming and gracious thing for her to do. This gave a very personal flavor to the invitations, and I admire her doing it. In this rushed modern life, it is a joy indeed to have someone do this kind f thing.

3. Yes, the informality of the wedding the bride did quite right in wearing what apparently is her most becoming hat. She wasn't garbed when its oil gushes, goes in for over-production, the bill becoming solid fills the pore as with tight little jugs. This loss of sebaceous oil attracts atmospheric dust which is blackened there. Also a blackhead is a nice a cozy little home for bacteria, it may make herts at any time into a pimple. Therefore, it is wisdom to keep to a balanced diet, to use astringents and plenty of soap.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Follett

Pale hair is terrible only when you need it, when the oil scalp won't grow its own. In beauty shops the term "false hair" is never used; those little switches, fluffs are "extra pieces." Offerings of this line are dainty, light, always in fashion. Pin curls can be tucked under side locks and the secret remains a mysterious and fascinating frame for the face. Whatever color is used, it must be applied carefully, stingily.

One way of freshening the skin after a busy day is to bathe the heavy evening date is to wring a towel out of ice water, place over the face and cover with a dry towel. Keep on until the flesh is steaming and pink.

The henna pack is a stronger coloring agent. It is made by mixing powdered Egyptian henna with boiling water to form a paste, spreading quickly over the hair with a brush, letting it remain on from five to ten minutes, then shampooing.

The blonde darling who has been sticking faithfully to blue rinse may now get a happy thrill by changing to faint green. In the evening, especially, green affords a mysterious and fascinating frame for the eyes. Whatever color is used, it must be applied carefully, stingily.

One way of freshening the skin after a busy day is to bathe the heavy evening date is to wring a towel out of ice water, place over the face and cover with a dry towel. Keep on until the flesh is steaming and pink.

SEVERE QUAKE FELT IN JAPAN

Caused Disappearance of Uninhabited Island of Sankan

TOKYO, Nov. 5.—(AP)—An earthquake which shook the north eastern Japan at 1:20 o'clock this morning (11:20 a.m. Tuesday, Eastern Standard Time) caused the disappearance of the uninhabited island of Sankan, off Port Kamaishi, into the sea.

It was the most severe earthquake in years in that section, but no loss of life was reported and there was no word of any serious property damage in advices reaching here.

Many telephone and telegraph lines were broken down and stone fences overturned. Tens of thousands of persons, aroused from slumber by the shock, refused to return to their houses and spent the remainder of the night in the open.

S. Miyaki, Observatory, near where the shock was the heaviest, the seismograph needle was thrown out of gear and the amplitude of the quake consequently was not measured.

Experts said the shock had no connection with the quakes which shook Kyushu Island, in southern Japan, Monday and Tuesday.

Columbus' Geography in European Libraries

PARIS.—Photostat copies of the geography, "imago mundi," which Christopher Columbus used, are now available in European libraries, the result of labors on the part of Edmond Buron, archivist of the Canadian Government.

Heretofore those who wished to see the geography, written by Cardinal Pierre d'ailly and containing marginal notes by Columbus, had to journey to Seville, where the original copy is treasured.

Mr. Buron has photographed the original, preserved the personalities and added comments made by Columbus, and has trans'ated the book from Latin to French.

The geography shows that when writing letters to monarchs in search of aid for his expedition, which resulted in discovery of America, Columbus based his calculations largely on the Cardinal's writings almost literally, especially when he wanted to impress upon the sovereign that the ocean was narrow and, hence, he would not take him long to cross it.

Passport and Visa Exemption Proposed for Olympic Athletes

A new impetus has been given to the Games plans with receipt of a letter this week from the President Hoover. In which he says that he will recommend to the next session of Congress passage of a resolution exempting visiting contestants and officials coming to Lake Placid Games from the usual passport and visa requirements upon presentation of the official Olympic identity cards, which will be duly visaed free of charge; waiving the tax of eight dollars imposed under the immigration law; and granting free entry for their personal baggage and equipment to properly accredited and identified participants in the Lake Placid Games.

SAY JAPANESE INVENT FABLE

Moscow Newspaper Calls Story Invention of Japanese

MOSCOW, Nov. 4.—The newspaper Isvestia charged today that Japanese militarists "invented the fable" of possible Soviet interference in Manchuria in order to cover plans for an extension of their own occupation northward "at least until November 18" when the League of Nations council meets again.

The militarists hoped, the newspaper said "to weaken the resistance of other imperialistic powers by the prospect of a conflict with the Soviet union, a conflict much desired in imperialistic circles in Europe."

Declaring Japan's first explanation was that her occupation in Manchuria was made necessary by the threat of danger from Chang Hsueh Liang's soldiers "who became bandits," Izvestia said: "Such an argument proved quite inauthentic, even in the eyes of the League of Nations, and a few ons was heralded."

SEVERE QUAKE FELT

Found Guilty of Falsifying Financial Statement of Company

London, Nov. 5.—(AP)—Lord Kyslant, formerly chairman of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company and one of the dominating figures of the British shipping world, entered prison today to serve a 12-months sentence for falsifying the company's financial statements.

His appeal against the sentence, which was pronounced by the criminal court last June, was denied by the Court of Appeals today and he was taken to prison immediately. He had been free on bail pending the appeal.

Hamilton, Ont., Nov. 5.—Fire destroyed a large barn on the farm of Elwood Whaley, Seneca, Ontario about twenty miles from this city early today.

PEACE DEPENDS ON FORCE OF WORLD PUBLIC OPINION

MONTREAL, Que. — (By the Canadian Press)—Whether the disarmament conference next February will meet with success or not depends to a large measure on the force of world public opinion brought to bear on it, and it behooves women to do all in their power in the meantime to foster a peace mentality. This was one of the points emphasized by Dorothy Thompson, American journalist, at the Montreal Women's Club here in the "Montreal Women Speak" series on "The Problem of Peace."

The lecturer, who in private life is Mrs. Sinclair Lewis, spent several years in Europe as foreign correspondent of more American newspapers.

Miss Thompson said it was no longer considered unpatriotic to call oneself a pacifist, but although the pacifist attitude of the world was opposed to war, countries went on organizing for war rather than for peace. A total sum of five billion dollars was spent annually on war preparations Miss Thompson pointed out. The interest on this sum it has been calculated, would pay the expenditure of the League of Nations, the World Court and the International Labour Office — the three mechanisms for peace — for six hundred years, she said. Besides the cost in money there was the loss to industry through the feeling of insecurity which much advanced legislation was held back for want of money. Military training was still going on in school's and colleges, which was not the way to develop a peace psychology, the lecturer thought.

SLED DOG RACES ON PROGRAM OF OLYMPIC GAMES NEXT YEAR

QUEBEC.—(By J. J. O'Brien Canadian Press Staff Writer).—Dog lovers the world over have been interested in the announcement that a demonstration sled-dog race will be included in the Olympic Winter Games for the 1932 season. The 50-mile, two-day race at Lake Placid, Petworth and T. R. will be the first time sled dog race ever held.

As a winter sport, sled-dog racing has advanced rapidly in popular esteem in a few short years ago the "sled-dog" and the "far north" were associated together as things to read and hear about, but only to be seen by a few hardy souls driven to Arctic regions by the spirit of adventure or the lure of gold.

In the East, as in the West, in the United States and Canada, winter races were held at odd intervals with whatever sled-dogs the next best substitutes were available. A few pioneers started to breed huskies and to organize amateur races on a large scale. They soon developed into keen rivalries and some semblance of the existing Sled-Dog Association of Ontario, Sledding, annual two-hundred mile non-stop race at The Pas, Manitoba, began to grow in importance and to over-shadow the earlier Alaskan and Yukon events. Quick on the heels of this were formed the Eastern International Sled-Dog Derby Club at Quebec, the Sled-Dog Club in the New England States, the Ottawa Sled-Dog Racing Committee at Ottawa, together with other clubs and associations in other centres, notably at Ashton, Idaho; Timmins, Ontario, and Truckee, California.

For the Quebec, Ottawa, and New England races gold and silver cups were donated by an enthusiastic public; three and five hundred dollar purses were offered by the sled-dog clubs, attracting the best of mushers, breeders and dogs.

From the bitter Scandinavian from the Alaska freight and mail trails, together with dour Scots-men from the western trading posts, came to know and compete with swarthy half-breeds from Quebec's hinterland and stocky French-Canadians from their trap-lines. From the lumber camps of Michigan and Minnesota leaders were known to vie with the best of Canadian mushers, and even Boston and Chicago sent their representatives to dispute for that magnificent trophy of the sled-dog racing world.—the International Championship.

Who is the champion musher? Which are the best sled-dogs? No decisive victory has yet answered these queries. First of the season, to hold the annual race, Ottawa dog-derby may be looked upon as the first stage of a three phase contest each held in a different arena. After Ottawa comes the Laconia race, a three-days grind through the New Hampshire hills; the victor at Ottawa and the loser at Laconia, but the final test of the season is to be seen in Quebec. One hundred and twenty-three miles over a period of three days; one hundred and fifty dogs straining across the snowy hillsides or twenty drivers, keen-eyed drivers gathered from the four points of the compass, facing the final of the trail, ready to give and take without mercy or whimper. What thousands and thousands wait patiently at the finish to roar their approval.

Every year produces its champions, but this year will produce an Olympic champion — sled-dog racing for the first time will become a genuine sport, and a Demonstration Race will be held at Lake Placid as part of the Olympic Winter Games program.

Here will assemble the greatest gathering of sled-dogs ever seen. Huskies and malamutes, Siberian eskimos and Great Danes, thorough breds, crossbreds and mongrels, with a host of attendants, trainers, owners, mushers and drivers, among which the initiate will distinguish such internationally known figures as Mrs. Kaare Nansen, Emil St. Goddard, Leonhard Seppala, Carl Berglund, Ashbrook Girard and others whose names have been featured across the headlines.

The race will be for a distance of 25 miles per day over a period of two days. No more than seven dogs and no less than five will be allowed to start on the first day of the race, and at least three dogs must start and finish in harness on the second day of the race.

The race is being conducted by the International Committee, composed of Walter Channing, chairman, Boston, Mass.; Louis D. Hudson, secretary-treasurer, Eastern International Dog-Sled Derby, Inc., Quebec, Canada; Capt. C. A. Hastings, chairman of Ottawa Dog Derby Committee, Ottawa, Canada; Moseley Taylor, president of New England Sled Dog Club, Boston, Mass.; Henry Stetson, Lake Placid Club, New York.

YEAR'S RECORD IS STANDARD

Teacher's Recommendation All That is Necessary For Passing

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 4—Pupils in Ontario may now pass through elementary and secondary system on teachers' recommendations and without written examinations, a statement issued yesterday by Hon. George S. Henry, Premier of the Province and Minister of Education points out. The Provincial Department of Education has been gradually abolishing examinations, says the statement.

The Premier's statement says in part:

"The public might be led to think from recent criticisms that pupils have been and still are suffering from the burden of examinations for which the department is solely responsible.

"It may not be generally known that pupils in their progress thru the elementary and secondary schools gain their promotion, not by taking and departmental tests, but on their record during the year. In the high schools where certain pupils desire to prepare for the professions or the universities, the case is different.

"The policy of the department has long been to check the tendency to take unnecessary written examinations.

"The Premier also points out that matriculation into the universities is not controlled by the Department of Education but by a joint board representing the universities.

Detector Brings in $625,000 For Four Weeks' Work

London, Nov. 5.—(Canadian Press Cable)—The post office department in the past four weeks collected $625,000 in $2.50 licenses from hitherto undiscovered operators now receiving sets in and about London.

A post office department truck, equipped to possess uncanny powers of locating unlicensed sets, provided entertainment through the city, the suburbs and neighboring towns to the considerable alarm of the private operators.

The department took care to let the public know in advance all about the powers of the detector truck. In fact so unearthly was the story made to sound that in some quarters rumors arose the truck was nothing more than an elaborate camouflage.

Only a little quarter of a million surreptitious radio owners lined themselves to post offices in such hasts that some offices ran out of license forms.

Boston Bruins are Prepared

Coach Art Ross Has 33 Players in Pre-Season Squad

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 5. — In their surge for their fifth consecutive U. S. Amateur championship, the battling Boston Bruins will come to the post with speed in National League warfare. Manager Art Ross is about to start his eighth season with the club under the most favorable of conditions. He has a nucleus of a dozen stanny veterans, including some of the greatest figures on the sport has developed since modern early hockey days as when Queen's University and the Royal Military College met on a frozen Citadel Field in Kingston, in 1888.

These reliables include the great defence trio, Captain Lionel Conacher, Hutchinson the dynamic Eddie Shore and George Owen, former Harvard Star. Then there is Tiny Thompson, one of the best goal tenders in recent years, plus such tested forwards as Dit Clapper, Weiland, Mark Peters, Art Chapman, Red Beattie, Perk Galbraith, Jim Gasper and the craft Harry Oliver, who has performed valiantly for the Bruins for the last five Stanley Cup struggles.

A couple of sticks at the Arena, where the Bruins are training with their farm team, the Providence, of the Canadian-American circuit, showed that Ross has 33 players in his pre-season squad.

Several of the newcomers, including Bill Thuber, a forward drafted from the defunct Ottawa Senators; Burly Joe Jerwa, the defence player who came here from the Rangers in the trade for Dutch Gainor; Dave Trottier, 194-pound Sirpiint from the Portland team in the Coast League; and to the "Caperer of hockey," 225-pound Jack Hollenbury, six foot three-ecopidgin linesman. He will probably be able to hang on until the season is well underway.

Most of the other Bruin prospects will be turned over to the Cubs for seasoning.

Bat. Battalino Retains Title

Featherweight Champion Had to Go 10 Ruonds to Beat Mastio

By William Weeks, AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 5 — Earl Mastro today was another one of the boys who have tried to beat the Featherweight championship crown from Bat Battalino's head without being able to do more than leave it slightly askew.

The hardy youngster from Hartford, Conn., who can be depended upon to fight like a champion when his title is the prize, did exactly that last night in the Chicago stadium, winning the decision after ten blistering rounds to thwart Mastro's challenge. The Chicago Italian, a master boxer, fought a pocketful of game fight, but the champion's ruggedness and never ceasing attack, won him the favor of Referee Dave Barry and every judge. The other judge cast his vote for a draw.

Mastro came to o'cie, however, that Barry's score card showed 51 points for the champion to 49 for the handsome Chicago youngster. The crowd of 14,022 spectators who left $40,353 at the gates, apparently approved the decision, although Mastro was a big sentimental favorite.

Set Own Pace

Battalino, as usual, set his own pace and maintained it almost without variation every second of the way. Mastro scattered him in spots and made him miss badly on occasions, but he end of every round found Battalino leading the advantage. He scored two knockdowns, and his purposeful body attack slowed Mastro down almost every time the latter got nicely started. Ringside observers credited the Champion with five rounds with Mastro having a definite edge only in the final. Battalino's record 123 1-2 and Mastro scaled 124 1-4.

Fights Last Night

CHICAGO, Nov. 5 — Bat Battalino, world featherweight champion, outpointed Earl Mastro, Chicago, (10); retained title; Louis (Kid) Kaplan, Brooklyn, Conn., outpointed Harry Dublinsky, Chicago (10); Barney Ross, Chicago, outpointed Sid Jarron, Cleveland (8); Charlie Young, Chicago, knocked out Al Keegan, Gary, Ind. (3); Sammy Mandell, Rockford, Ill., and Ralph Lenny, Dulce City, N. J. declared "no-contest" (8).

Fairmount, W. Va.—Buddy McArthur, Morgantown, W. Va., outpointed Billy Flanagan, Clearfield, Pa., 10).

Baltimore—Phil Raymond, Baltimore, outpointed Buster Brown, Baltimore, (10).

By The Observer

Bill Rankin received word from Matchmaker Stevens yesterday that there would be three bouts on the wrestling card staged at the Armory next Tuesday night. The first bout is a one-fall affair but is said to consist of 45 minutes. The second or semi-final bout is to consist of 60 minutes. The final bout of the evening will be the best two falls out of three, the time limit not to exceed two hours. These time limits are set by the Ontario Athletic Commission who set that the time standard in each bouts is ample to determine which is the better man.

X—X—X

Two of the most colorful wrestlers in the game have been signed for the final bout of the all-star card, they are Ed (Strangler) Canadian fight heavyweight who has been wrestling exclusively in some of the leading centres of the United States and Canada and who will meet Alex Kasaboski, Polish roughneck, who has been attracting much attention in the leading promoters for some little time now. These two men are considered the four strongest exhibitors of wrestling, in their class, in Canada.

X—X—X

Kogut has wrestled for the light heavyweight championship of the world six times and had had the privilege of meeting the last four champions and stood up well in the title bouts that he has been signed for. Kogut is a fine specimen of Canadian manhood and can grip gin and take it, the result of the battle may go.

X—X—X

Kasaboski is one of the roughest men in the game; he is better known as the "Wild Man of the Steppes." His stamp of fighting in order to gain a victory for himself, that, he scores times during the week of the house down upon his head. But he seems to thrive on the booing that is sometimes hurled in his direction. The best bouts like a feature that will be well worth seeing and as Matchmaker Cameron has one of the stage fortnightly matches in Belleville this coming winter it is expected that his opening show will be a thriller in order to impress the wrestling fans.

X—X—X

Trevor Mason, Stirling and Frankford men gave Campbellford the go-ahead. Remembered: At the annual meeting of the Trent Valley Hockey League it was decided that times were too hard to sponsor a league this winter so they disbanded for a season or so, it was said. Well, we seem west cat of the north country that a new league will be formed consisted of Frankford, Stirling, Marmora and Trenton. But this new league will be known as the Stirling County Hockey League —thus the Trent Valley league trophy, which Stirling have had lingering on mantle for some seasons past, will not be up for competition this year.

X—X—X

There is one thing certain that they can never reorganize that old league unless they get all Campbellford in it, they. Campbellford are one of the original franchise holders, so it looks as though Campbellford are left holding the bag and a town full of hockey players inside it. Ken Reid, who performed for Belleville seniors last year, is now a resident of the Hydro town. Perhaps if Campbellford do not have a team this coming winter, players like Fred Layram and Ken Davis will be down to try out with Belleville.

X—X—X

The question arises, who contrived this brilliant idea of Campbellford's league anyhow? They seemed to have a clear sailing last winter, so why the sudden change of heart? It is said that Stirling are one of the other teams concerned in the shift, were a little jealous of Campbellford's prospective chances of winning the league and pulling up even with Stirling, who have won the cup twice? It seems that the club winning the trophy three times may keep the "mug" for ever and ever, Amen. (Thus the change of heart, maybe).—

The radio listeners received a treat last night when Frank Nighbor, new manager of the Buffalo Bisons, in the International League, gave a hockey talk from station WGR, at Buffalo, during the Kendall sport broadcast. Frank told about some of his exciting experiences while playing in the old days. Nighbor seems to have made quite a hit as the new manager of the Bisons.

Alex Kasaboski was Trained by Late S. Stasiak

Alex. Khasaboski, Polish wrestling star, who is scheduled to meet Jack Kogut, Canadian light heavyweight champion, in the main bout of the show to be held at the Arena on Tuesday evening next is noted for his rough style and the reason for this is not hard to find. Kasaboski turned professional on the advice of the late Stanley Stasiak, such early hockey days as when Stasiak trained him for months. Stasiak is the huge Pole who met an untimely death in the Belleville Hospital as the result of blood-poisoning. He took a great interest in Kasaboski, taught him much of his knowledge of the sport and predicted that he would one day rank with the best men in wrestling. As a consequence the pupil adopted the tactics of his master and that is why he is one of the roughest, toughest, most unruly mat men of any weight.

"ALEXANDER HAMILTON" FINEST ARLISS PORTRAYAL

Last night's large and enthusiastic audience at the Belle Theatre gave enthusiastic approval to the latest characterization of Mr. Arliss, which, had his portrayal not been so flawless—might be called the finest of his career. It is not Hamilton; the financial genius, that the play deals with, but rather the man Hamilton—just his thirties—and involved in what is politely known as the Reynolds incident."

Mr Arliss depicts the fiery champion of human rights as the victim of the machination of an alluring adventuress, the wife of a pseudo-patriot, whose purpose is ruin of Hamilton. The woman is bent by her husband in Hamilton with a view to using to enslave her to get away from a supposedly loyal husband.

Hamilton is duly deceived and fascinated and Mrs. Reynolds reports to Jefferson, Monroe and other notables of the day, that he is making honour out of govern; ment funds. When accused Hamilton is able to clear himself of the charge of dishonesty, but confesses his imprudence with the question able lady. This is but one of many exciting scenes in a play that is laid in picturesque settings in and about Philadelphia.

"Alexander Hamilton" is based on the play in which Mr. Arliss starred some years ago, and which he wrote in collaboration with Mary Hamilt. His support is excellent, including Doris Kenyon as Betty Hamilton, wife of the hero; Alan Mowbray as General Washington and Gwendolen Logan as the First Lady of the Land; Dudley Digges as Senator Roberts; Montague Love as Thomas Jefferson; Lionel Belmore as General Schuyler; Morgan Wallace as James Munroe; John T. Murray as Count Talleyrand; Rolfe Sedan as the rascally Reynolds; June Collyer as the alluring Mrs. Reynolds, a part made by Jeanne Eagles in the stage production.

One of the many fine historical scenes in the play is Washington's farewell to his troops.

Although who directed Mr. Arliss in "Alexander Hamilton" with fine understanding of the many moods.

Add to your mental gallery of Arliss Masterpieces, which now contains "Disraeli", "Green Goddess", "Old English", and "The Millionaire"—the latest and most superb of his portrayals, "Alexander Hamilton", which will be repeated again tonight for the last time.

"FRIENDS AND LOVERS" AT THE CAPITOL

Two of Hollywood's "stormiest petrels" and, incidentally, the two most sophisticated actors on the screen, face each other in one of the most vigorous pictures of the film season, "Friends and Lovers" today and Friday at the Capitol.

One is Adolphe Menjou, who burst into screen popularity with Charlie Chaplin's "Woman of Paris." Since then he has gone from one striking success to another—"The Grand Duchess and the Waiter", "The Ace of Cads", "Gentlemen of Paris," "His Private Life", "Serenade", "The Front Page" and others.

The other is Erich von Stroheim, noted actor-director of "Merry Widow," "Greed," "The Wedding March" and "The Woman of Paris."

Menjou plays a British officer who finds himself in the blackmail toils of dangrlio, a so-called art collector, played by Von Stroheim.

Surrounding them in a cast of ten players including the tempestuous Lilyan Tashman, are Juliette Compton as the leading feminine part; Laurence Olivier, Hugh Herbert, Frederick Kerr, Blanche Friderici, Lal Chand Mehra, Vadium Oranoff and Yvonne Darcy.

Victor Schertzinger directed. The adaptation was prepared by Jane Murfin and the screen play and dialogue by Wallace Smith.

SURVIVES GIFT NIGHT

Tonight is again Silverware Gift night at the Capitol, when each lady will be presented with a beautiful article of silverware with the management's compliments.

"THE DAWN TRAIL"

Daredevil riding, stirring action and thrills galore are seen in "The Dawn Trail" the "Columbia Western" which will be shown at the Capitol on Saturday only.

The story is built around a scrap between sheepmen and cowmen in the Panhandle district of Texas, and the efforts of Larry Williams, county sheriff, to bring about peace between the two warring factions. Matters become complicated when Mart Denton his best friend and the brother of his fiancee Edmond and kills one of the sheepherders. How the young sheriff succeeds in doing out justice and eventually bringing about peace, supplies plenty of action and a wow of a climax.

Here is a "western" that was produced with as much care as a dramatic vehicle. The supporting cast is great. Mirian Seegar, a pretty blonde and a spunky little actress, makes a charming heroine. Charles Morton does very nicely with the unsympathetic role of Mart Denton. Chatsy Cabanne directed.

CHILDREN SHOULD SEE "TEN NIGHTS" AS WELL AS ADULTS

Though the play "Ten Nights In A Bar-Room" is many years old no greater note in human emotions has ever been sounded, than that of a child's love for its father.

The love and talks on the part of little Mary Morgan, in the picture is a splendid thing to see it brings to the mind the old axiom "My parents right or wrong, my parents just the same." Children and adults as well, will profit from the entertaining and important message revealed in "Ten Nights," which will be shown at the Capitol Theatre on Monday next for three days.

The Showdown. George O'Brien and Marguerite Churchill face their relentless enemy, Noah Beery in the Talkie version of Zane Grey's favorite story, "Riders of the Purple Sage," opening Tuesday-Wednesday at the Belle.

Erich Von Stroheim, Lily Damita and Adolphe Menjou as they appear in modern drama and heart rondlict, "Friends and Lovers," at the Capitol today and Friday.

MAID GAGGED BY STRANGER

House Then Robbed By Intruder After Gas Turned On

INGERSOLL, Ont., Nov. 4.—By the Canadian Press)—Turning from her ironing board to investigate a sound behind her, in the kitchen of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Stone, last evening, Miss Georgina Webster, the maid, found herself facing a stranger who demanded money. The intruder gagged the girl with one of the handkerchiefs she had just ironed, tied her hands with its mate and bound her feet with the cord fie detached from the iron. Before taking three dollars and a watch which he found in the house the man turned down the gas jets of the kitchen stove.

The girl, struggling in the gas fumes, finally managed to open the kitchen door, and hobbled across the street to A. McKenzie's home whence the alarm was given. Provincial and local police are working on the case today.

Canadian Party Swayed by International, Says Crown

Case Against Alleged Communists is Outlined

DOCUMENTS

TORONTO, November 4—Violent overthrow of the present order of things in Canada by armed revolt and bloodshed was pictured as the sole intent of the Communist Party in Canada by Norman A. Sommerville, K.C., special Crown prosecutor, yesterday afternoon as he outlined to the jury in Fall Assizes the Crown's case against the nine accused men.

By means of a deliberate, subtle plan, directed and controlled by Moscow, that Communist octopus was aiming at the demolition of existing institutions of church and state, he declared.

In preparation for that day, revolutions were being aroused, "Soviets were being formed and nurtured Where there was no strife," strife was created. Alliances between various groups of citizenry was fostered by the organizing of strikes, by the dissemination of Communist doctrines through factory and street and by the organizing of so-called demonstrations.

The Communist party were not aiming at reforms or the placing of demands before the authorities in these demonstrations, he asserted but were solely planned to bring about bad feeling between populace and police.

Says Antagonism Stirred

Evidence would be produced to show these things, said Mr. Sommerville, and it would show that detailed instructions were given out by the Communist Party for running these "demonstrations" so as to attain a maximum of antagonism between the classes, so that ultimately the Communist party would take the lead of the working class.

Revealing just how integrated the whole Communist machine was, Mr. Sommerville stated that it would be shown that every person who joined a branch of the party in Canada pledging his obedience to the central committee at Moscow—the E.C.C.I., or Executive Committee of Communist International.

That pledge not only had the allegiance of every individual member of the machine but could at will appeal to Communist officials and committees in Canada, as had been done, it would be shown. Decisions of the E.C.C.I. were obligatory on all minor bodies and had to be carried out immediately with the publication of the order in the local Communist paper.

One phenomenal feature of the organization was the fostering of "nuclei"—groups of two or more members in each factory, shop or mill—who were responsible to the local which was responsible to the central executive of Canada, which was responsible to the National convention of the party.

In each shop or mill the nuclei carried on the party's program and kept the party thoroughly informed of conditions existing there. In the same way they formed "street nuclei," or groups on each street who might be among their neighbors and spread the gospel of Communism.

Deloro's oldest society, inaugurated in 1901, the social and Dramatic Society of that village held their annual meeting on Thursday evening in Deloro Hall with an attendance of nearly eighty. President F. Pasquet occupied the chair.

Two boxing bouts were staged as a prelude. Perry Gray and Ray Lovelis bouned for two 2-minute rounds and the brothers George and John O'Neill caused much diversion with their three 3-minute rounds. W. Jamieson, Sr., acted as referee, and J. Ethier and M. Corcoran officiated as seconds. Next followed a screen comedy, "Cool Cats," after which the business of the evening was proceeded with.

Following reading of minutes, Mr. Pasquet made a resume of the year's activities and thanked the executive for their help and support during the past year. J. H. English secretary-treasurer, gave a detailed account of the receipt and expenditures of the society for the past year which showed the society to be still in a flourishing condition. Mr. Bailey Moore gives a brief report of the Christmas Tree "a real institution at Deloro", W. R. Reynolds gave the report of the library.

Election of officers was the next item of business. This resulted (with the exception of M. Corrigan replacing C. Sanderson) in a complete re-election. Following are the officers: President P. Paquet; Vice-Pres. W. R. Reynolds; Secretary-Treasurer, J. H. English; Auditor, G. R. Quinn; Master of Ceremonies, W. Kerr, Junior; Librarian, W. R. Reynolds; Management Committee, Messrs S. B. Wright, F. A. Baby, R. A. Elliott A. V. Yates, H. A. McMahon, S. B. Cheesman, W. Mumby, H. A. Lovelace, C. G. Mitchell, H. R. Hoacks, W. L. Rigg, M. Corrigan, W. Simmons, H. Hondreen, L. K. Crawford, J. Ethier, R. D. Murry and F. Leal.

The president then called upon Mr. Baby for a few words. In reminiscent vein, Mr. Baby spoke of the boom which the society and hall had been to the community whose people had appreciated them The speaker said they were fortunate in the officers appointed to look after the various offices. When thinking of them it was hard to particularize. Now that they had come to the start of the winter season, he hoped the society would continue to function as well as it had in the past. To make it a success every one must do his part and support those in charge of the affairs, said Mr. Baby in conclusion.

Misses A. V. Yates and P. Paquet then favored the gathering with two pianoforte duets, a Hungarian Dance and an Old English Dance. Another two-reel comedy "Battling Sisters" sustained the merriment of the audience until the meeting terminated with the National Anthem.

PLANES RETURN TO HOME PORT

Leavens Bros. Have Had Successful Season Flying

Leavens Bros. have returned with their aeroplanes to the home airport here. They have this season flown all practically every village, town and city of Old Ontario and the Province of Quebec. This Winter they expect to fly in Northern Ontario. Quite often three pilots within the firm have operated the planes and are unable to carry all who want to ride. This company have during five years of flying operations carried over 20,000 passengers without injury to any one of them. This is a record of which the Leavens Brothers are very proud. Safe, sane flying has been and is their motto with the desire always to educate the public to the fact that flying is safe and pleasant. Leavens Brothers in 1930 carried more passengers than any other company in Canada and will this year probably carry twice as many as any other.

It seems that to the average person the mention of aviation almost brings visions of bad crashes or dash-devil stunts. But the fact of this it is interesting to consider the record of Leavens Brothers in this city. This company, now the Leavens Bros. Air Services Ltd., during five years of operation starting with a war training plane and now operating three modern machines, have carried over 20,000 passengers without accident. They simply serve to show that with proper care and common sense air travel can be made as safe as any other form of transportation.

Simplicity's Reward

by Rita Dever

Phillip Trout skillfully turned his roadster into the cement driveway and switched off the motor. The little Terrier, Phillip's only friend, in his trim green tweed, bertha-fashioned coat, with matching hood, in his trim green tweed, bertha-fashioned coat, with matching hood, failed to thrill him. Never had he dreamed in all his twenty-five years it could be so empty. Now he was back to his own home at last, alone.

And then there was Debby, her pert little face framed in the yellow curtains of the kitchen window.

The next minute she was at the door. "Debby, dearest," he laughed as he caught her in his arms, "why the concealment?"

Debby freed herself, and shook out the folds of the now slightly crushed ensemble.

"It was the coolest thing I could find, Phil," she added hastily, "don't you like me?"

"I most certainly do. I remember that dress when you used to wear it in high school days. In fact" he went on as they walked through the living room, "you look cooler than—than—"

"Than the dinner," Debby finished. "Wait until I tell you."

"I will tell me, is Mr. Stewart really coming tomorrow night?"

"Absolutely. It's all set. And I'm counting on you to do us proud."

"You know I won't let you down!" Phillip grinned as she opened the door to the little side porch. There was a table, set for two, and a lighter. A large bowl of vegetable salad, a platter of bologna and a platter of bologna and tall glasses of ice tea.

Phillip laughed as he surveyed the table.

"I know it looks funny," Debby explained ruefully, "but it will be pretty good. I used the peas from yesterday, and tried out my own party shells. And I made a pie too. It tasted good but the pastry doesn't look very professional."

"Yes?" encouraged Phlip, "And the salad?"

"Well, they are the string beans and the beets we didn't use up on Sunday," Debby went on doubtfully drawing up her chair. "And the ice tea and the bologna are new."

"That sounds delightful," Phillip leaned across the table and kissed her. "And now, tell me about the Stewart plans. You know I'm the only one of the boys he's ever come to see. Of course, he goes out to Wentworth's swanky place and he's been down to Crake's summer home."

"We're going to show him we may not have so much money but we know," put in Debby, "That's why the heavy meal tomorrow tonight. It is going to cost a lot."

She scanned sugar into her iced tea and stirred it reflectively.

"Whatever we have, it won't taste any better than this," Phillip commended as he took another patty shell. "These may not be handsome but they're darn good," Debby beamed at him, but shook her head.

"Well, risk no home cookery tomorrow night, dearest. I was talking to Nona this morning and she is lending me Chloe for the occasion and she not only cooks but serves, so you won't have to worry about how the squab tastes nor how it will be served. And you can be sure the soufflé will be perfect and the ice soup jelled."

Phillip was impressed. "That certainly sounds good, but really this bologna isn't bad."

"Silly! By and by we'll be able to entertain all the time with ice soup and squab." Her eyes shining, she continued, I'm going to use the blue candles and have garden flowers fresh from Weatherby's, and of course, I'll wear the new marocchiffon."

"Have some more of this salad?" Phillip suggested, and then, "you've got the right idea for Stewart hasn't much of an opinion of Rosleigh Heights, I'm sure, and we just want to let him think we do this sort of thing all the time. I want—"

The repeated call of an automobile horn interrupted him.

"That sounds as though it were in our drive," Philip rose and went to the living room door as the bell rang. The next moment, Debby heard his voice at the front door.

"Why, hello Mr. Stewart, this is a surprise."

There was a muffled answer, Debby sprang up but before she could retreat, Phillip, accompanied by, came out on the porch followed by a middle aged and distinguished appearance.

"My wife, Mr. Stewart," stammered Phillip.

Debby acknowledged the introduction and wondered if the mad conglomeration of food on the table her absurd little organdie dress and her hair in tumbled, very unmaternly curls.

"I must apologize for coming like this, Mrs. Trout," Stewart said pleasantly, "but I had promised Phillip to drop around tomorrow evening. Now I find I must leave for Chicago tomorrow afternoon. And," he added, "I did want to see your place, and meet you."

"We're awfully glad you came," Debby assured him, and darting to meet Phillip's distracted signals. "We're having a very informal dinner, but—won't you join us? The invitation was in a brave rush.

"I had only intended to stop a moment," Stewart hesitated, "but it is so cool here—I'd really like to. That is, of course," he added hastily, "if I'm not intruding."

"Not at all," Philip put in, "Sit here." He brought a chair hospitably to the little table and Debby hurried to the kitchen for china, silver and food.

Through a mist of tears she saw the golden brown patty shells that cracked in the wrong places, the fresh green beans of garden lettuce, the plebian bologna and the blackberry pie, whose crisp crust was veined in wark purple fruit juice. This was the fare served on a card table, to be presented to this man for whom her big evening at a hostess had been planned. Bologna and home grown vegetables in place of squab and iced consomme—four year old organdie against a chiffon dinner gown. It was almost too much.

Valiantly she powdered her nose and wheeled her tea tray in from the porch.

"I do hope this has been no trouble," Mr. Stewart said solicitously as Debby served him.

"None at all," was her bright reassurance, without a glance at Phillip, but later when she did steal a look at him, from her place across the table, she recognized the signs of disappointment and doubt, behind the attitude of interest in Mr. Stewart's account of a fishing trip.

Mr. Stwart sio with a steadiness which Debby attributed either to hunger or politeness. The golden crumbly patty shells, the salad—even the bologna, received appreciative. Debby felt that last was too crushing. What must he actually think of them? Regular Rosleigh Heights dwellers—cheap suburbanites—people out of cartoons!

Debby was jarred from her reveries by Mr. Stewart's rising to really must leave—I was after nine. Polite good evenings, culinary compliments and he was gone.

Miserably, Debby flung herself on the porch swing.

"Phillip, darling," she moaned, "I feel dreadful. Never, never, have we had such a meal—and I served such funny clothes nor did we eat from the bridge table—why, oh why did I have to do it tonight?"

Phillip kneeling beside her, his arms about her tenderly whispered gently encouraging words, but he felt the little girl had branded him as a clerk forever.

The next morning, Philip hoped that in the haste of departure, Stewart might not see him and perhaps would forget the whole thing before his return. But at ten o'clock a call to Stewart's office.

Wearily, Phillip obeyed the summons.

"Good morning, Phillip," Mr. Stewart greeted him genially. "I can only give you a few minutes but I wanted to see you before I left. Mrs. Brand has just resigned. How would you like to try his job?"

"Smash job!" gasped Phillip.

"I know it's responsible," Stewart went on, "but I've had my eye on you for sometime, and last night settled it."

"Last night!" Phillip's head was reeling.

"The simplicity, my boy, the simplicity and charm of your home. It's what we're looking for in our detriment. But," he smiled, "how about the job?"

"I'll like it. I'm sure I'll like it—"

"I think you can too," Stewart reassured him, extending his hand. "It ready to take over his desk next Monday."

Dazed Phillip turned to the door. "By the way, Phillip," Stewart said suddenly, " Would you ask Mrs. Trout to let me have the recipe for having patties and beef bologna for dinner again?"

WANT MEMBER FOR THE BOARD

If Convened Will Enquire Into Charges Against President Hoover

Washington, D.C., Nov. 4 (AP) —If a wandering fifth member can be found, the board named to disprove charges made by the Navy League's chief against President Hoover will set its task tomorrow.

Years ago the board would have looked for John Hays Hammond working at his desk of mining engineer in some desolate jungle or Arctic land. Although he is somewhere in the United States now, he has been missing so far as the board is concerned since his appointment by President Hoover to inquire into charges made by Admiral Gardiner.

Confident, however, that he will turn up, the board is going ahead with plans for its first session.

Mount Pleasant Church Holds Diamond Jubilee

MOUNT PLEASANT ETC Jan 31 Over three hundred and fifty worshippers attended the Sixtieth Jubilee Anniversary of Mount Pleasant United Church on Sunday, November 1st. In the morning and at night the auditorium was packed to the doors and it was necessary for some to return home as they were unable to gain admittance.

Rev. J. P. Knox, an old Hawdon boy, had the honour of preaching anniversary services in every United Church in the township, gave two very forceful addresses.

In the morning he chose his text from Acts 2: 4 "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost". Speaking of the great need of the church today he emphasized the need of each individual church member, being spirit-filled and if so all other needful assessories would be given.

In the evening he based his remarks on Paul's Second letter to the Philippians, 4th verse—"Whereforo God hath highly exalted him and given a name which is above every name." He spoke of Jesus as the greatest Preacher, Leader and Physician, the world has ever known and spoke of him as the world's great unique. He charmed his audience with his apt presentation of Bible Truths and many hearts were attune to the blessings and glories of Jesus who was crucified that we might benefit thereby. The church was beautifully decorated with ferns and potted plants making a very pretty appearance, the messages of this jubilee occasion.

The pastor, Rev. Fred G. Johnson was also present for this auspicious occasion and very ably conducted the Dedicatorial exercises in his inimitable style. After the prayer the choir rendered the Lord's Prayer in unison. The pastor graciously welcomed Rev. Knox and also fittingly referred to the late Rev. Mr. Rymsay donated by Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bailey in loving memory of their dear departed granddaughter Miss Patricia Turner.

The pastor also regretted the illness of the choirleader, Mr. Ernest White who practised faithfully for three services but on Friday contracted a cold and was unable to be present.

He also paid tribute to the able assistance of Mr. Ed. Frear of Carmel.

The choir rendered very appropriate selections with Miss Olive McConnell as pianist. She was assisted by Miss Francis McKeown as accompanist for a quartette and solo.

Proceeds of the day amounted to two hundred and fifteen dollars and a Jubilee Pow! Supper is being held Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Locke and daughter Betty of Yellow Grass, Sask., are holidaying with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bailey.

A very successful Hallowe'en concert was held Friday evening at Mount Pleasant Hall under the auspices of the Y.P.U. The Fourth vice-President Miss Ida Thrasher and her Assistant Mrs. Percy MacMullen prepared the programme and Rev. Arm presided.

All the numbers were given in masquerade costume and a large number in the audience were attached in weird make-ups.

Messrs Archie Scott, David Bell, Charlie Carter and John Coggins rendered three pleasing vocal selections.

Piano Solos were given by Eileen MacMullen and Frances McKeown.

A vocal duet, Misses Edna and Mildred Sharp, Readings by Vera McAdam, Mildred Sharp and Thomas McKeown.

Vocal solos by John Coggins and Roy Thrasher. Story "Origin of the first Jack-O'Lantern", by Marguerite White.

4,000 Barrels of Apples Shipped During Week

VICTON, Nov. 5—Apples and canned goods are still going out of Picton Harbor in large quantities, nearly 4,000 barrels of apples having been shipped last week.

As at 9:30, on Saturday morning, the C. S. L. freighter, City of Montreal, tied up at the dock in Picton Harbor for a full load of canned goods and apples. As soon as the first cargo was ware cun out, laborers with their trucks started a continuous stream of canned goods into the holds. Canned goods were also loaded in the fore hold below the decks, while apples were stored in the after hold.

Shortly after her arrival, the Hamfreighter, Maria Lydia, tied up alongside with a heavy load of canned goods and apples. The apples were packed by G. F. Jarvis and were packed in the local, Star Brand, packed under the Fapeuse apple, and have been put up at Bellleville. The canned goods were loaded at the Bellevile dock at 4:30 a.m.

The Victon Lighterage was opened and barrels began to pour into the Montreal's hold from there. It is surely was a busy scene, and three holes scrubbed the Montreal's deck, while a chute taking canned goods from the warehouse added a steady stream. The vessel is being rolled in from the little freighter.

After the barrels were stored in the big ship, they were swung by crane into the lower hold. Here some of rope was passed about two barrels at a time and these were lowered into position by way-passed through one of the loop and secured. Then the windlasses were set to work, and at each side of the hatchway the barrels were handled speedily.

The last of the cargo was put in the hold and boards carefully placed across the top before a second load was put on.

Three thousand barrels were loaded, two thousand being Star Brand apples from G. F. Jarvis, the remainder was from Bellville, and packed under the Sig O Brand.

The City of Montreal arrived all day Saturday and cleared during the night.

On Sunday night at 10:30 p.m. the Bay Line freighter, Cruise Bay, docked at Victon and Huff wharf and loaded around five hundred and fifty barrels of apples for export apples from the Cold Storage.

In the morning another boat, the same line, the Pine Bay, tied up at the Victon docks and loaded about two hundred cases of canned goods.

Once Powerful Navy Slashed One Third Hard Times Hit Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile—Defeat in the recent civil war and financial stringency, instead of an arms treaty, have brought about a slash of one-third in the size of the Chilean navy, a short time in which the most powerful below the Equator.

Several thousand men and about two hundred officers have been discharged. The battle fleet has been taken from active service and placed into yards. A destroyer squadron of four, one-half the former strength has been put into commission with reduced personnel and the budget for 1932 will be cut about 25,000,000 pesos ($3,000,000).

Four of the finest years ruled Chilean naval programmes. The country lost to Peru Tacna and Arica provinces and got that fact.

The Chilean sea arm of her defences grew until it contained one modern battleship with 14-inch guns; one older battleship; three cruisers, eleven destroyers, nine submarines, a new mine-laying cruiser ship and new tender; several new naval tenders for repairs, a large schoolship, and lesser craft, bringing the total up to about forty craft of all sizes.

There were 400 officers and 10,000 enlisted men, including coast guard, naval stations' personnel and the naval aviation corps. The navy's budget for 1931 lists $14 officers of whom 65 are "active officers" and 65 officers' salary list of 16,50,000 pesos (nearly $2,000,000).

Naval curtailments in connection with the recent revolt and the trade drop in national income have slashed the navy's plans for a new fleet for the 15 air ears now is locked upon as the first arm of defense, instead of the navy, on account of the victory of the planes over the ships in Coquimbo Harbor.

The enlisted personnel will drop to about 6,000 under the new program. The officers' list will be reduced. The battle fleet, consisting of the flagship Almirante Latorre and other major vessels, will be tied up. Four destroyers and four submarines only will form the active squadron.

In a little house in a back street my children were playing, their mother and Dad's return. They are being left alone for a few hours, but they don't care for they are happy together until their parents come back.

There are six of them and in a few months they have been struggling to keep the wolf from the door. Their Parents' Income for Comparison—They have boarding greatly, as a result of which they have not the least fear of kidnapping and other dangers that all kindly nursing and loving parents fear.

Only a few days ago a distinguished lady said to me "I would give anything for two months a day now" in the hope that I would kidnap one of her children. But a short time ago a lady said to me "I would give you $5 if you would take one of my children" and, I know, he may be back again tak- ing one of them. But I will not.

Such were as this has ever occurred to me, and I am sure that I am not alone in my opinion that kidnapping is dangerous and despicable to parents of the comparatively well-to-do, but actually needs your help. "If you have any, send them to Dr. Barnardo's Homes, 281 Colborn St., Toronto."

DEAF MAY HEAR THROUGH FINGERS

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 5.—The deaf may hear through their fingers, thanks to an apparatus which causes vibrations of finger tingle on the skin.

Dr. Robert H. Gault, professor of psychology at Northwestern University and director of the machine, demonstrated its operation last night, showing how various words "sound" differently.

The apparatus consists of a small vibrator in the hand of a deaf person, connected with a microphone in the laboratory. When words are spoken in the microphone the vibrator buzzes.

The words "automobile" and "university for example," said Dr. Gault, "do not feel alike. The difference in feel is similar to that between a cake of soap and a bag of nails."

ENGAGEMENT OF KING BROKEN

Statement Comes From One Close to Entourage of King Alfonso

Fontainbleau, France, Nov. 5—(AP)—A member of the entourage of former King Alfonso of Spain today denied a published report that the engagement of the infant Beatrice to Prince Alvaro De Bourbon-Orleans had been broken.

The two were betrothed last May and it was announced, at the time that the wedding would take place before the end of this year.

The report which was denied for the former Prince had been found to be a "carrier" of Haemophilia.

The Prince of Asturias, Alfonso's eldest son, is a victim of this affliction, which is a condition in which the blood cannot coagulate. A slight cut may bleed to death from a slight cut.

All Earth's Elements But One Identified Search for Last Starts

ITHACA, N.Y. — Search for the last undiscovered element in the earth's 9 elements — the missing one now known as No. 85 — is on at Cornell University. There were two missing elements until recently. Then it was announced Prof. Jacob Papish of Cornell had obtained number 87. The 85 is now hunting 86.

The theories of how scientists know there are 92 elements, testimony to which is the chemical, facial and head cuts and, body bruises, following an auto accident Wednesday night.

Priest accompanied by his father-in-law, Provincial Constable Smith, whom he was staying at Missing was returning to Niagara after court adjourned last night.About four miles north of here an automobile driven by Castle met glaring headlights and pulled to the side of the road to avoid a collision. derstood. Element number 85 according to a prediction by Dr. James Kendall of the University of Edinburgh, will be a jet black solid, atomic weight about 218, density 8, melting point about 390 degrees, evaporate, virtually insoluble in water, but dissolving in many acids.

What discovery of a new element of number 87 will mean to the chemical. Element number 86 was only a number until 1900 when Madame Curie discovered it was radium.

Neon, familiar the world over in the past two years as a form of lighting, was merely the number 10, until Sir William Ramsay, assisted by the M'a, puttered around to discover that some atmospheric substance was heavier than it should be. He found it contained several undiscovered elements, one of which Neon was neon. The others were krypton, xenon, the last of which, argon, which was 18. Argon's name means "lazy." Little did it dream it found for it.

The next question aroused by Dr. Papish's discovery is whether scientists think 92 is the limit. Not by no means. In 1867 Sir William Lockyear discovered a new element in the sun. It was then unknown to earth. It was No. 2—helium. Ramsay years later found it on earth.

Last year, during the eclipse of the sun, a Tin Can Island in the South Pacific, Dr. Stanley Mitchell, of the University of Virginia, obtained spectoscopic evidence of a new element, presumably slightly different from the entire list of 92. Mitchell said this cannot be confirmed without much further observation.

Science has marked time so long at No. 92 that there are suspicions that maybe the 92 elements on the earth, everything in the entire creation.

CONVENTION REPORT HEARD

W.C.T.U. Meet at Home of Mrs. Hoskins, Trent Road

A parlour meeting of the Belleville branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union was held at the home of Mrs. Hoskins, Trent road, October 29th at Quinte Corners, the president of the local, Mrs. H. Hoskins under the direction of two groups, that of Mrs. Boyd and Mrs. Feeney and that of Mrs. Faulkner and Mrs. Brusch. The election rooms were visited to canvass- ity and the meeting was of great interest. Mrs. Denton, as superintendent, presided and opened the service with a hymn and the reading of John XV by Mrs. Sharp, followed by prayer offered by Mrs. Gardiner. The leader assisted by others presented an exercise on temperance in the form of questions, showing the insidious results from running money without equivalent value received. Mrs. Hoskins spoke of the Government and of abiding people toward gain, which comes from losses to others. An exceptionally fine solo "Consecration but know?" was given by Mrs. Arbuckle showing the last influence of our lives.

Report of Delegate

The report was then given by Mrs. Pearsall, the delegate to the Fifty-fifth annual convention of the Ontario W.C.T.U. which convened in the Dundas Centre United Church, London, October 5, 6, 7 and 8. Mrs. Asa Gordon of Ottawa, the President, presided. Impressive was her efficiency and humour and courtesy and the splendid spirit which all who attended the convention in this city last year will remember.

The inspiring communion service on the Sunday morning was conducted by Rev. E. W. Young, pastor of the church, assisted by other prominent ministers and gave a spiritual note which was continued through all the convention. The devotional part of delegates, the ceremony of selfless dedication of our consecrated of our church was led by Miss Duff. The Dominion President, Mrs. Wilson presented in turn, all-sensationally enthusiasm and Progress. The Provincial Superintendent reported literature given to shut-ins, auto rides for the sick, visits to the hospitals, garments for the needy and other helpful activities. Temperance in Sunday schools showed that 1321 schools take part in the study contest of 1926 during which signed against the rise of alcohol and 4 against cigarettes. The Scientific Temperance Instruction, it was suggested be the S. T. I. text book at each local regular meeting to gain facts about the harmfulness of alcohol.

Mrs. Ogden, the president, delivered her address in a forceful and inimitable way. She said among other causes for the decline in the dawning of the day when the liquor traffic would be outlawed in every civilized land. The influence of women to pray and not to faint, for during the past four years the W.C.T.U. has made a most valuable contribution to the progress of the world than any other organization. Since the days of Ontario, the liquor stores took in more than a million dollars a week. Surely people would have been better fed, better clothed and better housed but for the money spent for drink. Would there not have been more prosperity without the destitution but for the diversion of so much money from beneficial industries to the liquor traffic.

Made Comparisons

The total expenditure in the Dominion in 1930, according to the report of the Provincial Police Commissioners, reached $193,620,674. This is nearly four times the wholesale value of the most out door trade, twice the value of our product in the mines and is the equal of the total output of our forest and fishing industries.

In 1920, the Dominion Government reported four distilleries and fifty-seven breweries, now we have here twenty-eight distilleries and eighty-six breweries. Ontario has ten distilleries, fifty-two wineries, one hundred and twenty-five breweries and twenty-two government liquor stores and one hundred and twelve brewers' agencies. In a total of selling plagas. The average amount spent by each person in the Dominion holder is $121. Yet we were told repeatedly that Canada would prove a "sane Temperance Nation."

Support Disarmament

The W.C.T.U. members were urged to support disarmament, to realize their responsibility and opportunity to mould the idea of re- course to war.

In his address, Mrs. Gordon referred to the problems of crime among boys and said it was largely due to lack of interest in the homes.

Mrs. Ogden, Pageant was composed and directed by Miss Duff. It represented the provinces from sea to sea, those taking part wearing the costume and singing songs of the different provinces. Another of the programmes illustrative of the temperance conditions in each province.

On Tuesday evening a sumptuous banquet was tendered the visiting delegates. Words of welcome and greetings were spoken and toasts responded to. Mrs. Gordon, Mrs. McKee, bearing ninety years of age, drew four responses to the toast, words: "Be ye steadfast, immovable always abounding in the work of the Lord."

On Wednesday morning, an impressive memorial service was conducted by the President for those who had died during the year, including Dr. Amos Gordon, the late World President and Mrs. M. J. Kinney, the late Dominion's Acting President and World's First Vice-President.

The report on Citizenship was presented by Mrs. Pearsall of Belleville, who said that the best work had been done by the Toronto District and the Simcoe and Essex Counties. A woman had been elected school trustee, the establishment of a liquor store had been defeated and charges of immorality and been reported to the Attorney General, investigated and corrected.

Resolutions Passed

Some of the resolutions brought in by the Resolution Committee and confirmed were:

(1)—Whereas drinking scenes, lawlessness and disrespect for prohibition sentiment appear frequently on the screen with a most demoralizing influence.

Be it resolved that we condemn such films and appeal to the censorship boards to eliminate all such scenes and to have at least one woman always among the number of the censors.

(2)—Whereas, an increasingly large percentage of accidents and crimes are due, to indulgence in liquor, menacing the home and imperilling life,

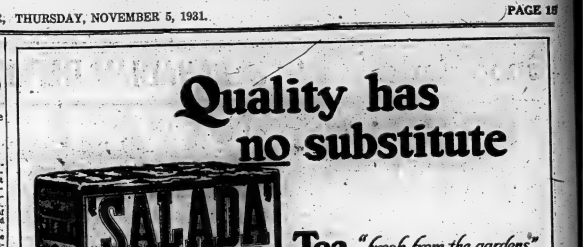
Be, it resolved that we reaffirm our unalterable allegiance to the Prohibition cause and our continued opposition to the liquor traffic and our steadfast purpose to work for its extermination.

(3)—Be it resolved also that we stand opposed to any legislation or effort to introduce the manufacture and sale of beverages with alcoholic content, including fortified wine and 4.4 beer.

After the session on Wednesday afternoon, the delegates were given a drive about the city by the London Life Insurance Company. through the courtesy of the President E. R. Wood, J. F. Mackie, Dr. H. F. Kingston, all honorary members of the London W.C.T.U.

The guest speaker of the Convention was Mrs. F. D. Richardson, President of the Ohio W.C.T.U.

She said that for one hundred and twenty-five years the United States had tried every possible way of dealing with the liquor traffic and they had found that Prohibition is the best possible instead of control. Two hundred thousand saloons were closed by Prohibition, but some were quickly turned into stores and today she stands at no vacant buildings that unoccupied on account of Prohibition.



An enthusiastic vote of appreciation was given Mrs. Gordon for her splendid work As president for the past four years and regret expressed that she would not stand for re-election.

After a pleasant social hour at Mrs. Hoskin's home, when new members of the London W.C.T.U. were received, all were invited to the dining-room to partake of a dainty lunch, provided by the groups already mentioned.

WILL RESTRICT GRAIN BEARS

Chicago Representatives Submit Their Scheme To Pres. Hoover

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—A plan by limiting bear activities in the grain pits was described to President Hoover as an echo of his last Summer's shot at speculation sheep selling. At his request representatives of the Chicago Board of Trade called at the White House and outlined a scheme they had devised. Miles Steven, spokesman for the group, said the president "appeared satisfied."

Strawn explained the plan operated through "business conduct committees" working with Government agencies. Upon reports of "irrational activities," he said committeemen acted directly to combat the rallies.

Hoslt as president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and attorney for the Chicago Board of Trade, Strawn was able to report there had been less short selling in wheat during recent months than for at least a year previous.

Last July, when aroused by persistent bear raiding in the wheat market, President Hoover aimed a vigorous denunciation at a "limited number of speculators." He left their names unreported.

Strawn today recalled that the president's blow was not aimed at the ordinary transactions of the grain exchanges, including legitimate hedging. He said those he spoke for had "no quarrel with the president."

Machine is Ready.

"Mr. Hoover did not criticize short selling," Strawn continued. "That sometimes is necessary and has to be. What he did criticize was bear raiding and we assured him we had a machine that would turn over to combat this vicious practice."

A unique form of life preserver is a complete suit of rubber, so designed that the user floats with his head well out of water.

CUTS DAY OFF TRIP TO CAPE

Peggy Salaman Reduces Time on Air Trip to Cape

CAPE TOWN, Union of South Africa, Nov. 5 (AP) — Peggy Salaman, pretty and vivacious 19-year-old British society girl flyer, landed here today after a flight from England in which she lopped a whole day off the previous record set by Thalea Glen Kingston, noted sports man and man of daring, last April.

Miss Salaman and her co-pilot, Gordon Store, set the girl's diminutive plane down on the airdrome at 7:40 a.m. and calculated their unofficial time at approximately 5½ days. Kidston's time was 6½ days and it was an amazing record when it was made. The previous record had been 9 days. Kidston was killed in a plane crash in May.

The girl left Kimberley on the last leg of her flight 4 hours and 20 minutes before she landed here. The distance is 900 miles. A large crowd had gathered at the airdromes when she arrived and she was given a rousing welcome.

Miss Salaman became interested in flying a year ago when she tired of the drawing rooms of London's fashionable Mayfair. The plane she used was a gift from her mother, who did not approve of her daughter's such a flight. She kept her plans secret from her parents, however, until just before she took off last Wednesday from the Pyrnpon Airdrome.

She has a reputation in England for being enthusiast and efficient in everything she do...s.

10,000 SLAIN BY CHINESE

Information Given By Japanese, Who Are Close to Situation

Changchun, Manchuria, Nov. 5—Fully 10,000 Korean farmers have been massacred by Chinese or slain while defending their homesteads during the last six weeks in Kirin province alone, according to an estimate given out here yesterday by the Japanese general commanding a division of 3,500 troops with head quarters at Changchun.

The commander here asserts that although the Chinese announced a policy of non-resistance at home and in Geneva, in reality his forces had been meeting continuous resistance since Sept. 18, partly from regular troops, partly from bandits, and often from both in conjunction.

College for Hoboes Planned in New York

NEW YORK — The hoboes are planning a university of their own. They talked it over here recently at a convention in Astoria Hall, and decided that the school would begin functioning as soon as the third floor of the Bowery flop can be repaired. It's to be a regular college, where the hobos can study geography, sociology, history and similar subjects.

The school will be known as the James Eads Howe Memorial University, in memory of the late "millionaire hobo". The hobo university will not have the extensive plant of some institutions of higher learning —the rent will be only $25 a month —but it hopes to have good teachers. Dan O'Brien, chairman of the meeting, said well known scholars will be sought as guest lecturers.

The university also will have a room for a hoboes' welfare bureau.

PROSPECTS OF EASY WINTER

West. Canada Has High Temperature and No Frost

Winnipeg, Nov. 5.—Prospects of an easy winter for the coal bins are seen here in such summer phenomena as butterflies flitting about and flowers blooming. Most unusual of all a Winnipeg resident yesterday produced several bunches of ripe red raspberries which he picked in his garden.

Weather prophets look on these as confirming predictions of a mild winter made by Manitoba Indians. In the meantime the weather continued mild and forecasts indicate no winter chill in sight. Local thermometers registered 48 at noon yesterday and the lowest mark touched during the night was 30.

FEAR THREE LOST

Cottage in Midst of Settlement is Alone Burned

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 6 (CP) — Two charred bodies, thought to be those of a man and a woman, which were found in the remains of a fire gutted cottage at Orchard Beach, Lake Simcoe, early this morning, were removed to Sutton where an inquest will likely be held this evening.

Three lives may have been taken, Coroner Dr. Dillane said today. They are: dead, also missing and locked in an adjoining woodshed.

Police are at a loss to understand how the fire from this cottage originated in the midst of a crowded summer houses, did not ignite the whole settlement.

The blaze was first discovered by Coroner Dillane. The bodies were later recovered by a party of neighboring farmers, after the flames had subsided.

Hyde at 195 Pine St. The building is of a frame structure and some ashes had been placed around the base of the building for this purpose and it is thought that there must have been some fire embers in the ashes as the fire started between the sheeting of the base and the basement room had the blaze under control and very little damage was reported.

The scene number on the car was EK-611, and on enquiry from the car it was learned that he was proceeding east to visit relatives and friends in Brighton.

Keep Cars on Move Past Base

It is undoubtedly an attractive and most interesting sight, when numerous planes are manoeuvering over the Royal Canadian Air Training Base. It is of so great and absorbing interest to many people that they stop and linger along the Belleville-Trenton highway in motley numbers as to almost block the roadway with their cars. This is of such frequent occurrence, it is said, as to almost require the constant attendance of a traffic officer when the planes are manoeuvering. Ontario Provincial Constable Byles, under whose supervision this highway comes, assisted in this duty to visit this locality when the planes are active to keep the traffic moving—when his duties on other highways permit him doing so.

TOO COSTLY SAYS PREMIER

Quebec Slighted in Water ways Negotiations, Says Taschereau

"We in Quebec", the Premier said, "are vitally interested in the St. Lawrence waterway, which is one of the most beautiful in the world. "The St. Lawrence River is one of the great natural resources of the province of Quebec. We must protect it. We have a right to have our views heard by the Federal authorities for our commerce to the extent of millions of dollars may be affected above Montreal, and by the newspapers that the United States is urging the Dominion government to state its position. I think that the Province of Quebec should be consulted."

PROTEST NOT SENT TO JAPAN

Takes Form of Friendly Presentation in Regard to Situation

Washington, D.C., Nov. 6 (AP)—A renewed protest from this country against armed hostilities in war clouded Manchuria lies before the Japanese government.

Its contents carefully guarded, the note was presented yesterday by Baron Shidehara, the Japanese foreign minister by Ambassador W. Cameron Forbes.

As have been other representations of this government to prevent open war between China and Japan, the communication maintained this country's attitude of strict neutrality. Tokyo the government considered it a friendly representation."

RELATIVES ARE UNITED THRU AGONY COLUMN

All's Well That Ends Well After Storms of Fate

FORTUNE COMES

Belleville Man Finds Relative, Goes to Chicago

The "agony columns" of a Toronto contemporary was directly responsible a few days ago in reuniting two long lost cousins, who for the present prefers to remain anonymous with a relative whom he had not seen in boyhood years, and whom, owing to certain provisions of a will he is benefiting from it was necessary to communicate with.

Eighteen years ago these two were in business together in a Western prospect mine near San Francisco, California. The mine gradually petered out and they abandoned both enough funds to set up in some other business, and the two friends parted. One of them later met all his savings in the real estate slump which took place in California some ten years ago, but the other had meanwhile had come to Ontario, bought out a business in Toronto which had proved exceedingly and finally sold it after making considerably more money to add to his accumulated account.

About nine months ago an uncle of theirs died, and as he had no dependents or other closer relatives, he left some forty thousand dollars in cash and a large, modern farm to be divided between them. Since then the will has been held by a prominent law firm in Toronto who have been unable to discover owing to locate the missing relative.

Through the efforts of the man who now resides in Belleville and with the aid of the personal column in the Toronto paper he has at last been successful in locating him in Chicago. Three days ago he left for Chicago by motor automobile, and it is presumed that by now a happy reunion has been effected.

Remembrance Day Announcement Is Made At Ottawa

Ottawa, Nov. 6.—Remembrance Day, November 11, the 1st of July, Labor Day, Christmas Day, or New Year's Day. As it is a holiday established by legislation, there is no necessity for His Excellency the Governor-General to proclaim the day a holiday. Neither is it necessary for any provincial or municipal authority to proclaim a holiday. The intention is that Remembrance Day shall be observed in the same way as Armistice Day has been in the past. The desire of the government is that Remembrance Day "be observed and honored throughout the country."

In an official statement issued yesterday, these declarations are set out to avoid uncertainty in the matter.

Remembrance Day Like Christmas Says Ottawa

Retailers Will Not Close But Observe 2 Min. Silence

Merchants to Observe Half Holiday Week For 11 Months

A well attended meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association was held at the Y.M.C.A. at 10 o'clock today under the chairmanship of Mr. Ira Hanna, president of that body.

It was decided not to close the retail stores on Remembrance Day, Wednesday next, but to observe the 2 minutes' silence at 11 a.m. Mr. Thompson of Ottawa, representative of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, addressed the meeting, explaining this matter and told what other municipalities, as well as Ottawa are doing along this line.

Messrs. R. Tymony and G. A. C. Weir of the civic unemployment relief committee addressed the gathering on the aims and plans of that body. A strong committee was formed to organize its all ways possible, with the central organization, and to interest the various merchants for an option on one day a week, or part of a percentage of the employee's wages going toward the winter campaign fund and to ascertain the feelings of their employees in this regard.

President Hanna expressed his opinion at considerable length. Remembrance Day and Thanksgiving Day, holding the former on the Monday previous to or on Armistice Day, as a matter of choice, was passed favoring this suggestion.

Effecting everyone in the city, employees, customers and the people generally, was a motion passed to close the retail stores on Wednesday in order to celebrate seven months in the year December being the only month excepted, the closing, probably to start at the first of the coming year.

JURY TRIAL AT MARMORA

Interesting Case Heard in Division Court on Thursday

The town hall at Marmora was crowded yesterday with spectators and witnesses for the hearing of the interpleader issue between a judgment creditor, J. McCredie, of Hastings, Ontario, and Leonard Hawley, of Marmora. The case attracted unusual interest owing to the fact that the claimant, Leonard Hawley, demanded a jury to try the issue as it is very seldom juries are called in matters under the jurisdiction of the Division Courts Act. The total panel of eleven jurors was summoned but only five actually sat on the jury in the Division Court and the trial lasted nearly the whole day. McCarthy obtained a judgment in his Warkworth court against Mrs. Cecelia Hawley on a promissory note. Subsequently proceedings were instituted on her behalf for a new trial, which was refused by his Honor Judge Hayden, of Peterborough. After the judgment was obtained and Mrs. Hawley failed to pay the judgment, execution was issued and the bailiff seized a motorcar. Leonard Hawley, the husband of Cecelia Hawley, claimed to be the owner of the motorcar seized and the issue before the court was to decide whether Leonard Hawley proved the ownership or to what damages he should received from McCarthy for wrongful seizure of the car. The car belonged to Mrs. Hawley, the judgment debtor, or not. The jury after hearing the evidence, counsel for both parties and the charge of his honor the County Judge were out for an hour and brought in a verdict in favor of Hawley, endorsed with money furnished by Mrs. Hawley, the judgment debtor, but was bought in by the wife of Leonard Hawley after the marriage of Leonard Hawley to Cecelia Hawley and found that the Whippet sedan was owned jointly by husband and wife and in any event they would allow no damages to Leonard Hawley. Counsel for the parties moved for judgment and the motion was subsequently heard before his Honour Judge Deroche at Belleville. Major R. D. Denton, K.C., was counsel for McCarthy. Mr. F. Wills, Marmora, was counsel for Leonard Hawley.

ARRANGEMENTS ARE PERFECT

Baptist Women Congratulated on Excellent Details

Closing the convention program of the Women's Baptist Foreign Mission Society of eastern Ontario, Miss Hazel Holden, a missionary on furlough from Bolivia, gave an address outlining work to be done in that district. Preceding her talk there was a service conducted by Miss Forman, while Dr. Sarah Cook presided at the devotional period.

Today there were meetings of the Home and Foreign Boards. Delegates were taken in buses at nine o'clock and one-thirty for a visit to the Belleville Children's School for the Deaf.

Western Avenue Baptist Church women are to be congratulated for the way in which they arranged every detail for the comfort of the visitors. The work of billeting was efficiently carried out and throughout the convention local ladies were present to assist the visitors in any way.

Justice Raney Finds Car was on Wrong Side

Simcoe, Ont., Nov. 6 (CP) — An automobile collision near Port Rowan last May had its sequel in Simcoe Fall Assizes Supreme Court sittings here yesterday, when George Pierce of Port Rowan, was awarded $17,000 and costs in his action against Harold McCall of Simcoe.

Pierce claimed $19,000 per personal injuries and $500 for damage sustained by his car, as a result of a collision with McCall's car. Mr. Justice Raney found the McCall car was on the wrong side of the road at the time of the accident.

The award of $1,200, brought by McCall's insurance company, was disallowed.

St. Lawrence Waterway May be Discussed

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 6 (CP)—Hon. W. D. Euler, Canadian minister to Washington, is on his way to Ottawa from the United States. With the return of Major Herridge, the St. Lawrence waterway proposal may be under discussion. For the present though, no official comment is available on the suggestion of United States Secretary of State Stimson that Canada had been delaying in presenting her proposals towards treaty negotiations in the objection of Premier L. A. Taschereau, Liberal leader in the Quebec Legislature yesterday that the Dominion government had proceeded in the matter without consulting that province.

ARGUED CROWN HAD NO CASE

Defense Counsel Asks That Case Be Not Sent to Jury

BARRIE, Ont., Nov. 6.—For the fifth day, Robert Wilfred Chapple, 24, merchant, and Gordon E. Castle, 22, chauffeur, faced the jury Carlyle chauffeur, faced the jury and a crowded court room as their trial for the slaying of Mrs. David Riley, wealthy Medonte farmer's woman, resumed today.

Pressing the identifying of signatures of Elliott and Castle by Oliver B. Stanton, handwriting expert, C. W. Bell, K. C., defence counsel, asked that the case be taken from the jury. He submitted the crown had not made out a case to go to the jury.

"The evidence as presented of any accomplice which would assist the crown to argue he has any case has not been brought out," said Mr. Bell. "Certain evidence of incidents at Niagara Falls, by Elliott, is not sufficient to go to the jury.

The crown has not excluded the fact that the money from the bank was anything more than a pure coincidence.

"My friend has adduced no evidence as to what would assist the jury to cause death, or nothing that she attacked and murdered her did he exclude the possibility of the car leaving the lane with Castle at the wheel.

"There is no evidence proving, in a legal sense, that the fire was actually of an "incendiary origin," said Mr. Bell.

Justice Mr. Justice.

"No matter how immortal Elliott's relations were with the woman, does not the whole case rest on whether or not Castle willfully drove the car to the spot causing her death," said Mr. Justice Jeffrey. "Is there other evidence save that of Elliott's relations with Mrs. Riley, it does not make him guilty of the crime of murder.

"He can only be found guilty of murder if Castle is found guilty of wilfully driving the car over the unconscious. All the evidence was only to show a motive. Is there evidence sufficient that the jury could convict, that he intended to do something to cause that night?

"There appears to be no reason why Castle should want to end the life of an employer who had been so good to him and to his associates" said Mr. Bell.

"It is a strange case," said the Judge, as C. F. McCosig spoke on Elliott's behalf. "Elliott is not charged with murder, but with aiding, abetting and consulting. Castle is not guilty then Elliott can't be found guilty."

If the crown proceeds with a manslaughter charge against Castle, on a charge of criminal negligence in the woman's death, arising out of this case, Elliott would not be implicated.

Mr. White argued that the jury could consider a verdict of manslaughter arising from the fact that the car might have been driven wantonly and negligibly by Castle resulting in Mrs. Riley's death.

"Your Lordship might direct the jury to find him not guilty of murder but guilty of manslaughter," said Mr. White.

"It is culpable homicide if he drove the car over the embankment and constitutes manslaughter."

Modern Docking Facilities Being Constructed by the Canada Cement Company

Point Anne Dock Will Be Ready at Opening of Navigation

185 FEET LONG

Wharf Will Be Most Up-to-Date of Any On Great Lakes

That the larger industrial concerns of the Dominion are looking forward, optimistically, toward re-awaked activity in commercial life, is an ample evidence in the work being projected about the plant of the Canada Cement Co., at Point Anne. When a concern of this magnitude lay out operations such as are now under way, one can appreciate that soon, by artificial aids to trade benefits therefrom. And the Point Anne outfit is prepared to cope with the increasing business of the future.

By the middle of navigation next season, Point Anne will be able to point with a feat of satisfaction and pride to her new docking facilities, which have been progressing on this understanding since the last ship left, until mid winter long. When the shipping of rock ballast ceased during the summer, the gang who were employed in handling it, were immediately shifted to the new work, and have been working since in filling in for the new dock.

Run Parallel to Old

The dock will run aparell with shore just to the south of the present one and will be 185 feet long. This will enable the coal carriers to discharge and reload from both holds at the dumps in the new fill in.

The entire structure is to be made of cement and the reinforced concrete used in the dock is said by the work are under progress of construction now, the varying in weight from one half to three tons. Here is how when this work is completed, 42 cross sections 12 inches by 12 inches and 25 feet long, also 42 sections 16' 10" by 10 and 12" in thickness and 350 cubic corner fillings 12 square and 12 inches in thickness.

Seven Piers Dock

The dock will be made up of seven piers varying in height, from bay bottom, 20 feet to 38 feet and will be linked up by a series of the 22 foot reinforced concrete units mentioned above. When the cribbing for the fifth and the last two sections are in place, the fill will be well confined. The entire length of the dock, 185 feet, will have a cement surface 16 feet wide and 15 inches thick.

When finished the dock will be one of the finest and most up to date of any in the great lakes for its purpose.

The Point Anne plant is still busy shipping out. Dominion Construction Co. at Fraserville on the Ashlidi River, are the contractors in working on the new power plant of the Ontario Power Corporation, and it will be February next, before this contract is full filled.

POLICE INSPECTOR BOLTER UPHELD

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 6.—Defending himself against charges that he had neglected his duties as police protection for a meeting in the Uhrichsville Town Hall here, on October 23, Inspector Herbert Bolter was upheld yesterday by the Board of Police Commissioners.

The charges followed a free fight which broke up the meeting in the church. An Anti-Soviet lecture was in progress when a number of alleged Communists created a disturbance and broke up the meeting.

Japanese Troops are Near Soviet Sphere of Influence

Moscow Warns Japan and League of Nations

NEAR BOUNDARY

Tokyo, Nov. 6 (AP)—On the threshold of the Russian sphere of influence in Manchuria and only a few miles from the Chinese army which had withdrawn in the face of their deadly fire, Japanese troops stood their ground near Angangchi today.

The 800 Japanese troops occupied all important points in the vicinity of the railroad bridge spanning the Nonni River, scene of the battle Wednesday and Thursday of last week, morning, in which 15 Japanese and 120 Chinese were killed and 200 Chinese and many Japanese wounded.

The Tokyo government announced its troops would not advance upon Angangchi or the more important neighboring city of Tsitsihar unless the Chinese soldiers continued to fire upon the Japanese bridge guards.

Having gradually extended their sphere of occupation, the Japanese troops today were occupied at Taonan, railway station north of the Nonni River and in the hills commanding an excellent view of the bridge.

Hit such positions the Japanese Chinese and Russian interests were at close quarters. A few miles to the north runs the Chinese Eastern Railway, jointly managed by China and Russia, but staffed with Russians. Angangchi is the northern terminus of the Japanese-operated railway, which was built by Chinese with the aid of Japanese capital and which serves as an important feeder line to the Japanese-operated South Manchurian Railway.

JUNGLE LIFE IS PICTURED

Mr. R. J. Graham Delivers Address on African Journeys

Rapt listeners of the congregation in Bridge Street Church sat spell-bound as Mr. R. J. Graham, globe trotter and prominent public speaker, in his scheduled talk last night, pictured the mysteries of the jungles, the fivers and the mountains of the Dark Continent.

In a delightfully informal little talk in his own inimitable manner he drew a vivide picture of the places he had been and the things he had seen during his four month's sojourn in that mysterious country.

During his speciner talk he introduced, vividly the three most mentioned animals in that country, Mount Kilimanjaro, the Mountains of the Moon and Mount Kenya. The last mentioned mountain could offer one the coldest, and the hottest in the world. Being the third largest mountain in the world it was a fine example of the gradual means from the torrid, equatorial heat of the tropics, to the cold ascending the slope in gradual ascent from the tropics to the zenith of the heat and cold. At the summit there is perpetual snow, which is the highly rarefied air, but at about the centre it is nature's own garden. There a famous Catholic mission is maintained which is entirely self supporting, schools have two thousand children.

Mountains are perhaps the finest shooting preserve left in Africa. Mr. Graham told how he and his escort maintained their camp here for a month and how record sized fine bags were secured. The speaker stated, however, that he would "shoot only with the small movie camera he had along, but it was difficult to get within the various herds of almost every variety of animal could mention, and the pictures, he got were few. There is also a protected preserve here from the propagation of native vegetation and one can stand on the observation platform of the car on the railway line which runs through it, and see the animals in nature's throw away. Just in this part appears in the white men had never invaded the country.

In Uganda, West of Kenya, no white man can take up land, yet it would be the greatest cotton district in the world if the shiftless natives could be compelled to grow it. The British government who control this land by having an English governor over each one hundred square miles, have now instituted a method of barter whereby no money is allowed to be used, and staples are paid for in raw cotton.

From this point they went to the Congo, the elephant hunter who had been constantly shooting the animals for nine months to lead sickness in the form of blackwater fever, an aftermath of malaria, had "got" him, and he had died soon after they got there. One elephant tusk in the stock he left, weighed over four hundred pounds. Near this point a rare coincidence occurred and one which made the speaker shudder as his bones ached sick. Another elephant hunter nearby shot a "Pygmy" chief cance to paddle around an inland lake.

Passing through here they entered a country depopulated by the tsetse fly an insect about four times as large as our house fly and which sucks the blood germ of sleeping sickness. For five hundred miles along the river and for five miles inland on both sides of it, not a human being was to be seen in any of the settlements. Mr. Graham stated that they practically forced to live in tents of mosquito netting to escape this scourge.

The Belgian Congo — where the huge gorillas and monkeys of every size inhabit the dense jungles was a next visited and word picture depicted. Here the party followed during which a series of amusing, high winded and dangerous adventures were elaborated upon, and the hardships of his address slipped quickly by for his open hearted listeners, who never having had the chance to go and see for themselves this wonderful country were getting almost as good a description of it in every detail as if they had seen it with their own eyes. At the conclusion Mr. Graham was heartily thanked for his striking address by the Rev. McMullin, minister, on behalf of the congregation and at the conclusion an old-time song was rendered by Mr. Palmer and his three sons.

PLANE HELD BY OFFICIALS

Failed to Report at Designated Airport on Return From Canada

Ogdensburg, N.Y., Nov. 6.—An airplane owned by Will J. Clarke, of Rochester, today was held by customs officials here for a penalty of $500 under a charge of failing to report at a designated airport of entry upon returning from Ottawa, Ont.

The case was in charge of Frank B. Henry, special agent, and it was said that if the matter was not adjusted today the plane would be seized. The machine was piloted by Gustav Kraus who was accompanied by Austin Emery of Rochester, nephew of the owner, when it left here yesterday morning.

The men said they had to fly from Ottawa to Montreal against a forced to descend at Billings Bridge when the plane was damaged in an accident.

Nurse Swears Were at Spot

Knew Elliott as "Doctor Stain", Engaged to Him

DON'T SAY ANY MORE

Barrie, Ont., Nov. 6 (CP)—Testimony by Miss Viola Marchildon, 22-year-old Hamilton nurse, marked last night's hearing on the trial of Robert J. Elliott of Barrie, and Gordon K. F. Castle, of Carlyle, Ont., charged with the murder of Mrs. Elizabeth Hisey, of Midland.

Miss Marchildon told of meeting Elliott at the Hisey home and becoming engaged to him.

She told her, she said, that he had inherited the Palmer House, a Westbourne Hotel property, and a number. Following the fire on December 16, 1930, she said he told her he was going to collect $15,000 insurance.

Mrs. Hisey met death when the car, driven by Castle, plunged into a ravine at the Niagara Falls entrance at Niagara Falls, Ont., February 18th last. Castle is charged with the murder. The trial of Elliott and Castle, which today enters the fifth day, is presiding in the Assize before Mr. Justice Jeffrey.

The two men also face a charge of arson in connection with the burning of the Palmer House, owned by Mrs. Hisey.

Miss Marchildon testified she had jokingly suggested to Elliott the hotel at Waubaushene was burned for the insurance.

"Don't Say anything like that say Castle heard the girl.

She reiterated her declaration, made at the preliminary hearing, that Castle and Elliott had stopped at the cottage of Mrs. Hisey near her death, three weeks before the car plunged into the river.

Stewart, local haulage man testifying late yesterday, said that Elliott had suggested the burning down of the Palmer House would be one way of making some money." Asked if Mrs. Hisey knew of the suggestion, Stewart said Elliott told him she did not know anything about it, but "there would be some way to get her to sign up."

The Crown will probably rest its case today.

MILD BLIZZARD STRIKES CITY

Heavy Fall of Snow Driven By Brisk North Wind

Blizzards in early November to Belleville are usually few and far between. But Belleville was visited Friday morning with a mild blizzard to-goodness snow storm. The snow was driven along by a strong north and motorists travelling in a northerly direction found the going quite difficult as the snow was quite heavy for a time and the high north wind it continually stuck to the windshields.

Reports from Western Ontario stated this morning that they had experienced the first snow-fall yesterday. The fall of snow was reported as being deep enough to cover the ground. Locally the fall of snow did not last very long as the sun soon broke through the prevailing clouds and the little flakes were soon melted by the sun's rays.

Early this morning the mercury dropped to a few degrees below the month. When it registered 29 degrees or 3 degrees of frost. Ice was seen early this morning on the small ponds of water in and about the city and although there was only three degrees of frost considerably ice was also noted during the night. The sun broke through and shone to the best of its ability but the mercury only rose to a height of 39 degrees in the middle of the day. In comparison Thursday's temperatures were 45 high and 34 low. Thus Friday's registered temperature was 6 points 5 lower than any that has been experienced this fall.

WHEEL BURSTS, THREE STRUCK

Boy's Arm Lopped Off, Section Flies Third of Mile

Cornwall, Nov. 6.—A 22-pound section of the flywheel of a circular sawing machine was hurled a distance of a mile here Thursday afternoon, pierced the roof of a building, passed through a side wall and landed within a few feet of several persons.

Three persons who were operating the machine were injured.

The saw had been set up near the home of Harry Kedaisch, 1 Sixth Street west. The motor of a truck was used to supply the motive power. Beckstead, with Floyd MacKenzie and Gerald Kedaisch, was engaged in tightening the driving belt, when it slipped from its bearing and struck the end of the main shaft.

The saw stopped with a jerk, and a 250-pound counter-balance wheel cracked into a dozen pieces.

MacKenzie happened to be in the direct path of the hurtling fragments and was struck upon the head and knocked unconscious.

McGillivray, a 16-year-old boy, was struck by a jagged piece of steel, which severed his right arm. Kedaisch was also struck on the arm, and the bone was broken in three places.

The victims were taken to Cornwall General Hospital, where they are reported to-night to be recovering.

One of the larger sections of the fly-wheel, 21 inches in length and weighing 22 pounds, whirled into the air. Residents on Third street west, three blocks south of the scene of the accident, heard a peculiar roaring sound. A huge chunk of steel passed over their heads. It crashed through the steel roof of a building and cut through the side wall.

It landed in an ash heap only a few feet from a group of children who were playing in the yard.

WOLVES AND DEER AT KINCARDINE

KINCARDINE, Ont., Nov. 6—(By the Canadian Press)—With wolves and deer now within a few miles from Kincardine, and the appearance of a deer on the streets yesterday, residents are wondering if they will acquire a reputation as a backwoods settlement. Much to the joy of the lous citizens, the deer disappeared in the direction of the lake shore.

MAN RIGS UP CAR FOR SUICIDE

Toronto, Nov. 6.—The body of C. W Schearer, 47, a casualty was found yesterday in his automobile on the outskirts of the city. Police say he took his own life by connecting the car to two cylinders of acetylene with the exhaust, and bringing it through the heater into the car. Doors and windows closed the doors, and turned on the engine.

ANCIENT HISTORY

Queen's Bench Court Records Found in Partitions

In the year 1794 Captain Meyers built, on what is now called Mount Pleasant Hill, the first brick house Canada has ever seen. And in 1799 John Simpson built the first tavern in Thurlow on the southeast corner of Dundas and Front streets.

The Meyers Mansion, which was known as Meyers' Creek then, and called "Segonaska" by the Indians, remained the renowned Belleville Governor Gore, who named the town after his wife. In 1804 the first sidewalk of flagstones, was put down on the south side of Bridge street and shortly after, or some time about 1806, the old tavern which was erected on the hill on Pinnacle street to the east of the present Bridge street, was opened for business.

Pinnacle street to the east of Bridge street, was then called "Gallows" street and stop signs will be placed at the several intersections between the upper bridge and the Canadian National line of way.

By a recommendation the Public Works Department will relay a section of the storm sewer along Bridge street in the vicinity of St. George's Church as outlined in the Engineer's report to the council some time ago.

Pinnacle and North Front Called "Through Streets"

Decision Made By City Council as to Road Rules

RELAY SEWER

The city council at their regular committee meeting held on Thursday night tinkered with the traffic by law of the city, as a result of which a number of streets have been added to the "through street" list. The council ordered a stop sign placed at the north east corner of Pinnacle street and St. Paul street designating Pinnacle street a "through street." This will prevent traffic difficulties at a dangerous intersection. The pavement on North Front street being completed from the upper bridge to the Canadian National Railway right of way, the council designated North Front Street a "through street" and stop signs will be placed at the several intersections between the upper bridge and the Canadian National line of way.

By a recommendation the Public Works Department will relay a section of the storm sewer along Bridge street in the vicinity of St. George's Church as outlined in the Engineer's report to the council some time ago.

Patriarch Comes with Staff, Bag

A venerable old patriarch, swathed in a long garment which hung below his knees an elevenshed leather overcoat nor gown, and whose long, white beard swept down about his chest, clumped up the Dundas street, shortly after ten o'clock last evening, leaning on his staff and perched a small skull cap, and the hair, matching his beard was white and flowing.

In one hand he carried a large cane or staff and with the other he clutched tightly a bag slung over his shoulder, in which it seemed a quantity of clothing was being carried.

A group of small boys following at a respectable distance behind and watching him very closely conveyed the impression that it was some relative of Santa looking for head quarters in the city, but as he already had a good start towards the north east point it is assumed that location in this city was not suitable.

ACCIDENT CASE AT ASSIZES

Ridge Road Accident Case Results in Damage Verdict

PICTON, Nov. 6.—Supreme Court was held in Picton this week with Justice Kelly of Toronto presiding. There was only one case, Simmons vs. Bigg. This action arose out of an automobile accident which occurred on the Ridge Road in which a car owned by Wilbur Simmons was badly smashed and in which he and his wife were injured. The defendant was Charlie Bigg. The accident happened when Bigg attempted to turn out and pass the Simmons car, the two cars colliding so as to turn the Simmons car over twice and wrecking it.

Counsel Present

Grant, K. C., of Toronto and P. Ward of Picton appeared for the plaintiffs and W. S. Lane of Picton for the defendant.

Mr. Justice of Van Luven Bros. Kingston; Bert Alyea and O. Cooper, local garage men; L. A. Venable, local land surveyor; Mrs. C. Bigg; Boyd Nelson, farmer residing near the scene of the accident; the plaintiffs and the defendant; Dr. T. S. Philp and Dr. C. A. Pulker, gave evidence.

The jury awarded damages of $100 to Sidney Simmons and $779 damages to Willie Simmons.

Memorial Day.

Plans are being completed for a great memorial service to be held in Picton next Wednesday morning, November 11, at 10:30. War Veterans, Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, Cubs and Brownies, and representatives of many organizations will march to the monument where a service will be held. Several hundred school children will lead in the singing of hymns and there will be short addresses by noted speakers.

The two minutes' silence will be observed at seven o'clock.

Flowers will be deposited on the memorial and other acts of remembrance carried out. Several thousand people are expected to attend and nothing is being left undone to make it a service never to be forgotten.

The Veterans are holding poppy tag day on Saturday and on Wednesday evening next will hold the annual banquet. The speakers will include Col. Pearless, V.C., of Toronto; R. M. C. at Kingston and Col. Sutherland, Minister of National Defence at Ottawa.

Marooned On Island.

Frank Smith of Belleville, Colin Wright of Wooppoos, and Hubert Greenfield of Picton had an experience that they will not soon forget, this week when they were two days on Green's Island in the Bay of Quinte off Waupoos. Going to the island they were unable to get back to the mainland. They shot chickens ducks and appeased their hunger by cooking several. The island has no vegetation so they were wet and cold.

WEAR A POPPY

The local branch of the Canadian Legion is making its annual Poppy Day appeal to the people of this community, on Saturday. The Poppy Fund is now a recognized institution wherever the Canadian Legion exists in Canada, and it serves a twofold purpose of much merit. The money which is raised by the distribution of the blood-red poppy, the symbol of sacrifice, is used entirely to relieve unusual distress among war veterans and their families. In times of depression, it has been found that the veterans, on account of the fact that many of them have disabilities and handicaps, suffer even more than others who are out of employment, since many of them require special care and attention which they are unable to provide. This is where the Poppy Fund, raised by the distribution of poppies by the local branch of the Legion, steps in and provides relief for the situation. It is likely that the demands for such work will be heavy this winter, so a substantial fund will be required.

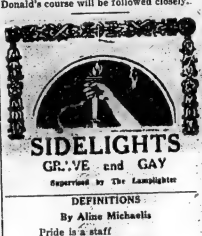
There is a second reason why every citizen should wear a poppy. These poppies are manufactured in the Veterans Shops of Canada, workshops in which handicapped veterans are given sheltered employment, and in which they manufacture the hundreds of thousands of poppies which are distributed every year at this time. By wearing a poppy, citizens can find much satisfaction in knowing that they are helping these handicapped veterans to obtain a livelihood which they would otherwise lack on account of their special disabilities.

This year, the appeal should find a ready response in the hearts and minds of the people of this community, which has always been ready to help make the way easier for those of its citizens who served their country and Empire in the Great War. We cannot express our sympathetic commend it to their generosity, in the hope that they will respond generously in this year of great need, and thus help to hold the fort flung to them by those who did not come back from the great struggle.

DETECTORS

The modern device of the radio detector truck has scared many Britons into paying their radio licenses when the presence of the sets was revealed by the truck.

So far men's thoughts have been able to escape detectors except in a general way and there has been the privacy in the mind. Though mind readers have probably claimed the ability to reveal the hidden thoughts of men and women, though Dr. Freud has said some weird things about human motives and their origin, man and woman preserve their privacy from the mental detector because it has not been invented. The only detector of this kind is a human being also, though human minds can hide for a while their inmost thoughts from their best friends. In the long run however the thoughts and the motives write the tell-tale message on the face and general behaviour so that in the end there is really no detector needed. Yet in some details of life it does seem that a detector might be successfully used, say in business. To tell when a customer who wants credit is what is known as a "dead beat" or "good pay." Grocers and merchants generally could afford to pay a good price for a detector of this kind for their particular benefit. But in the wider sphere of life nothing of the kind is necessary. The individual tells the story at last himself or herself in the well spent or a wasted life, in a life of deception or a life of honesty and fairness to all.



VEERING POPULARITY

The reaction of men to events and the ceaseless ebb and flow of fame were never more clearly demonstrated than in the career of Right Honorable Ramsay MacDonald, prime minister of the National Cabinet of Great Britain and former Labor premier. It is only fifteen years ago he was a very unpopular man on account of his pacific attitude on the war. Today the world listens to him, and he is given a large measure of credit for the remarkable strength of the National Government because of the great support which Labor gave the government by following the MacDonald lead. He whom none would listen to and who was prevented from playing the British game of golf on Lossiemouth, some years ago, is today the mouthpiece of the strongest government British people, at least in point of numbers, in generations.

Of course the setting has changed. The world situation demands for that time was a time of life or death. An unpopular move was enough to eclipse a man. Today in peace time financial and social troubles do not ostracize a man.

The Toronto Globe points to the former popularity of Lloyd George who today leads less than a handful of battered remnants of the party which formerly followed him, as a sign of the fluctuating fortune of the game of political life.

There is no doubt that in this national emergency MacDonald was given the support of the vast majority of the people, Conservatives, Liberals and Labor because they had faith in the man. In view of the veering of political fame Mac-Donald's course will be followed closely.

Pride is a staff
All oaken-stout,
Which helps bent lives
To get about.

Which is for defense,

Of excellence.

But love's a sort,

That makes rough paths

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS are spent in these enlightened days on public parks and playgrounds, and this type of investment in humanity is considered the kind of investment any municipality could make. Belleville invested some money in parks and playgrounds and what citizen regrets it? They are improvements which will last forever and add beauty and give class to the community. Belleville's recreation park and fair grounds cost considerable but constitute a visible asset which no one would exchange for the old grounds, even though the cost would go a long way toward paying for the esplanade. My friend, The Incurable Optimist, remarked, "I may be dense, but I cannot for the life of me imagine why sane men could swap such an improvement bonanza as the esplanade for a ditch to bury $65,000 or more in. The esplanade offers the quickest returns in actual service of any civic improvement which could possibly be undertaken and the government would pay a large percentage of the cost. Not even the alluring bait of possible insurance rate decrease in the misty future nor the unsubstantiated claim that many other cities have duplicate water mains should divert attention from this really big and meritorious project, of accumulating benefit, improving the city every year, the esplanade—a thing of beauty and a daily reminder of the traffic congestion on Front street which it removed."

EVEN 'WAY BACK in George Washington's time men had differences of opinion. George Washington was the first president of the United States, and the country started with him, as you might say.. Differences of opinion make horse races, as David Harum once remarked, said, and various other things like wars on land and sea and in once happy homes. In the picture "Alexander Hamilton," played by George Arliss and others at The Belle Theatre this week, this difference of opinion is shown when Hamilton and Jefferson, at that day divided upon the question of centralized government, some of them preferring thirteen separate governmental and no central government to act as governor and clearing house of all legislation; a federal financial system was also denounced as impracticable and could only be enacted after a compromise and swap of votes. The truth was that Alexander Hamilton and George Washington had a clearer vision than most of their colleagues and could see past the narrow parochial limits of home town and home state and vision the greatest good to the greatest number. Men of larger vision given power could all its really great and worthwhile improvements and lived to hear the plaudits by those who opposed them and held back communal benefits because of defective foresight. Time to look with wider vision upon the Bigger and Better things for Belleville and point to see and forget the narrow and niggardly position of "What will I get out of it?" Better things for Belleville and nothing too good for the old town with the young spirit.

TEN BAGS TO A FAMILY

The Ontario Growers' Market Council is optimistic. It says a way for the potato growers of the province to market their crop and secure the ready cash which so many of them need at this time. It sent time. All that is required, it suggests, to place between five and six million dollars in the pockets of the potato growers is that every family in the province at least one boy ten bags of potatoes.

Perhaps, to the Ontario Council, that would be a comparatively simple matter. But we wonder if the average family to consume ten bags of potatoes. Of course, families of Irish extraction might, by reverting to the traditional habit of having potatoes on the table three times a day, get rid of ten bags within a very short time but we are not all Irish, and some of us are not so fond of potatoes as others.

Nevertheless, the idea is a good one in principle. The only difficulty is that we are being told to eat more wheat, eat more apples, eat more butter, eat more cheese, eat more prunes, and so on, until it becomes a matter of much difficulty to get within a mile of the injunction to follow. The human system can only be stretched in the way of foodstuffs, and there are limitations to variety. We would suggest that if some means could be found to ensure three square meals a day for every family in Ontario for the next six months, it would go a long way to turn the farmer's products into cash than a herculean effort on the part of each family to use up ten bags of potatoes.—

DICTATION AND ENGLISH

Speaking recently to the English Association, the Archbishop of Canterbury took up his parable against typewriters. He said the habit of dictation, he declared, is destroying the art of the letter-writing but the purity of the English language, and, he maintained, the "first serviceable word that comes along" is used, with the result of insipidity and corrupting English speech.

It is strange that the Archbishop did not cite a writer long famed for his nice choice of words, whose ever else was said of Henry James, everybody would admit that he was a perfect master of the exact and delicate verbal shading which his choice manner required. Moreover, his private letters were, in this respect, almost as brilliant as his vein as his novels. Unfortunately for the Archbishop's argument, however, Mr. James used to walk up and down, dictating both fiction and letters to a secretary seated at a typewriter.—New York Times.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION—A NOVEL PLAN

One of the most interesting features of industrial life in Britain since the War is the growth of the five-day week and the consolidation of the free Saturday morning to industrial activities. Many young people are now working for these living.

The Chief Inspector of Factories in the Old Country reports that every great industry in the land is represented by individual firms in which the adopted this plan. In one district for instance, 194 firms possessing 144 works, out of 200 have put into practical effect, employ 31,479 people, of whom 8,429 are young persons under the other examples are cited to show that the system is gaining ground steadily.

The task of providing technical instruction for the young people rests upon the local authorities. While no general scheme has yet been devised, such classes have been established in many districts, and from the interest that is being taken in them, it is anticipated that they are likely to become general in the country.

Incidently, the longer weekend appears to have resulted in much satisfaction both to the employers and the employees standpoint. Fewer cases in the overhead charges, increased production, less absenteeism, and a more alert-minded staff fit the employer. And the health of the employee has been greatly improved particularly in cases where they have to travel long distances to work.

The advantage to the young workers of such an opportunity as the free Saturday affords is obvious. Where organized games exist, they can attend special classes provided, but there are also such institutions available, the local authorities are gradually providing special facilities and classes are being organized. In some districts these have been in operation for a considerable period, and are doing most effective work.—Montreal Star.

CONFIDENCE

Today, there is a definite rise in public confidence. It is due, we believe, to the circumstance that men and women, and business leaders, as already suggested, have profoundly changed their opinion. They have ceased to issue reassuring but empty statements to the effect that all was well if the public would only be patient, and in place of this mode of thought have substituted a facing of realities. In other words, they have dropped the vain posture of crying for the inflated notes of 1929 prosperity and have begun to look forward instead of backwards.

This changed attitude has manifested itself in various forms of action. In Britain a National government has been formed specifically to deal with an emergency. France and Germany are nearer a reapprochement than in the last eight years. Italy after unrattling the saber to call for a naval holiday. Incidentally, Premier Laval and President Hoover get together in conference to discuss matters of recovery. In the United States—apart from the idle moratorium—banking facilities have been established and industry takes a second breath. In Canada, gold exports have been stopped and a call is sent out for an economic conference.—Ottawa Citizen.

Little Benny's Note Book

Last nite after supper ma said to pop, Willyum, don't you think its time you had that old davenport furniture re-upholstered or at least sumthy reupholstered?

Pop said he guessed so if you asked me what tim. it was Id say, it was time for pop to get a new set of furniture reupholstered, not even sumthy. Dont forget we are fallin behind the times if we dont do sumthing right away. What am I going to say when the neighbors ask me if I am smoking a 5 cent cigar, or at least I am just about to smoke one, he said.

And he took one out of his pocket an lit, saying, And furthermore Im going to injoy it just as much as it I owed 2 bucks for the cigar and not a glaring red and gold band accross it like I got now, he said.

And he bit the end off and lit it, saying, In fact Im going to injoy it even more than I would at a expensive cigar, because Ill have the added satisfaction of proving that I am not one of the men who are continually wasting their time thinking and choosing and who be the most expensive costs the most must therefore be the best. Ive let myself that I have the will power, the main determining factor in the good judgement to reckonize the high grade tobacco independent of its cost, and in fact this particular 5 cent cigar is the last of 5 fragrant little brothers and sisters that I have been continually smoking all afternoon. Quality regardless of price, and the cheaper the better, thas my guiding principal, thats how to injoy life, and furthermore I think we have the living room set reupholstered just now? ma said.

No sir, Im not like a book, pop said. And he went out to take a walk and when he came back he was smoking a Queen Billie cigar with a band on it.

Proving he had been to the cigar store.

ON THE STREET

There's an odd quirk in all of us that somehow comes to the top no matter how hard we try to repress it.

We'd walk five miles to help some dog that was hurt, and yet we wouldn't take a soul to know it. We'd get up in the middle of the night to put some homeless baby robin back in its nest, and yet we'd admit when we were going to bed that any other excuse but the right one on the tip of our lips. We stare startled at the untidy at every place else on the street except the tumbledown Salvation Army lass holds out to us on Saturday evening, and yet we'll walk down the street and pass out a half dollar to the first ragged patch-holder who accosts us—and know darn well all the time that the first grey dime he hits it will be just another half dollar gone where all the rest of them did.

Your reporter was walking down the street last night when one of the "regulars", a real big-time artist—I knew he was the minute he stepped into the side street—and three kids in Montreal. (They always come up on the right side of a person because then it won't be so hard to dip into the small change pocket and shell out.)

He was draped in a long and shaggy overcoat and minus the buttons, had a greasy woollen muffler around his neck, sandshoes pads that looked—as if they were, on bad boys, grey, a pair of shoes split wide open, and on his head a cap which looked as if it hadn't been off for weeks, under which protruded in bunches and snarls the longest hair I had ever seen.

What was visible of his face under the stubble of whiskers which had taken possession of it and had begun to wander aimlessly down his cheeks and the muffler joined his throat, made one feel as if he had been more than a bit lost at one time, and the nose, sensitive and purplish, bore the traces of his hands, when they rested long enough from their constant twitching to be observed, were thin, tapering hands; hands uncalloused by work, long hands. And hands that had handled many a deck of it in years gone by. But it was when he spoke that one sensed the difference. Here was the bum-ear accent of the common, blindo stiff utterance; here was a man who had at one time been a gentleman and still retained a few of the finer points of his gentleman's training, telling me a cheap little story I had heard a thousand times from as many seedy looking individuals. My story was this in effect:—Why couldn't he think up something better than that little old hard-luck tale?

I had a quarter—I gave it to him because I wanted to be rid of him. He was a story, and even cub reporters know a story when they see it, but I didn't feel like writing it up. I just wanted to take him in and get him a meal, and then go home and write up my story.

Sometimes you meet a guy like that and when he's told you his story but you wouldn't get it. Of course he'll tell you one set in such detail that he'll be sure you've heard before. And I'd rather not. So thinking I had just met some one—and had talked to him—who had been through the doctor perhaps or one of a hundred other people, you do not need meet. And there's a story there if you can get it, but sometimes even newspaper reports get sentimental.

THE ESPLANADE

To Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Sir,—May I read your comments re the relative merits of the Esplanade and Bridge? I fully agree with you in all your suggestions.

The esplanade will be worth a great deal more than it is a thing of beauty alone and what a delight it will be to walk on it and parade through it, especially when its east and west ends are completed, etc., as it will be in time.

It will be a beautiful drawing card indeed for beautiful Belleville, for it will extend your water front some 2,000 feet—a Yonge street in miniature.

Yes, a thing of beauty is a joy forever, and a beautiful esplanade will be a fitting and lasting memorial to our beautiful Sagonaska Bridge.

Now why build it over twice as wide as necessary at twice the cost when one half the width is just as good for utility purposes. Are we afraid of 14,000 trying to get to Toronto with her 80-foot esplanade? Of course not, and the wall will be built.

Let ten feet from this wall be used for parking cars. Let it be parked straight against this wall and not diagonally. Then the present street more would be parked. Again every foot of parking space between the wall and the gangways on the west side and the present gangways and bus stands and all other places where signs are placed "no parking here," parking accommodation is limited. I have no hesitation in saying that as many cars could be parked along the wall, straight against it, as can be parked on Front street diagonally. Now this area would not need to be paved.

Old Mother Earth would suffice, consequently a great saving in the five-foot sidewalk, also five feet of concrete pavement.

Next, an 18 or 20-foot concrete road, not an asphalt road, could be built from the King today into a sidewalk, 35 or 36 feet over all. Another advantage would be we would not have to encroach so far by 44 feet on the back yards of the Front street store back yards we built here.

This is a very important item to the public. No esplanade would not cost much more than the pipe laying from the filter, so why not start at once.

Yours truly.

Gandhi Bidden to Meet King

London, Nov. 5 (AP) — Mahatma Gandhi received a message from the King today inviting him to a private talk after the reception of the delegates in London.

Commenting humourously on Gandhi's intention to wear his loincloth to the party, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Indian poetess, said: "If the Mahatma won't wear trousers, morning coat and high silk hat, I will make him a present of his hair for the sake of Queen Mary." Gandhi is virtually bald.

Science finds new reasons for KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN

MILLIONS have found Kellogg's ALL-BRAN a safe way to overcome common constipation. Now science shows this delicious cereal brings three benefits to the diet: "Bulk." Vitamin B. Iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like the "bulk" in lettuce —only it is concentrated in a more convenient form to relieve constipation. It absorbs moisture, forms a soft mass, which gently clears out the wastes.

Vitamin B tones the intestines, and promotes regular habits. Iron builds blood, and aids health generally.

No wonder ALL-BRAN is considered far more natural than pills and drugs — so often habit-forming. Try two tablespoonfuls daily. If you suffer from intestinal trouble not relieved this way, see your doctor!

Serve ALL-BRAN as a cereal or use in cooking. Recipes on the box. And-green package. At all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

Buying Wisely

An old and conservatively managed banking institution has issued to its 240,000 depositors a circular message that merits consideration, also by customers of savings banks generally on the North American continent.

This bank points out that hoarding and thrift are not synonymous terms; that, in fact, they are quite as different as courage and fear. The circular therefore gives the following advice: "Keep on deposit a reasonable reserve against emergency, not a hoard."

"If you have a surplus above all likely need, make careful purchases of things you want for permanent use while prices remain low."

"See that your home is put in good repair. Do not let your automobile or any other property get run down. If you have long needed an added piece of furniture, shop carefully and buy it now."

"Buy clothing and other needs in reasonable quantities. Buy real estate if you are planning for a home of your own."

"Wise spending at the right time is just as essential as preventative measures to ensure good health. Wise spending of available money encourages prosperity and corrective measures, good health and enjoyment."

"Every citizen who spends such money in some useful and wise way is contributing to the relief of unemployment and to the return of confidence and prosperity in this city and county."

Babson's Statistical Organization in their Canadian Babson's Chart, points out: "We feel that pessimism has been allowed too free a rein. In our anxiety to get over the world's depression epidemic we sometimes fail to give proper evaluation to existing conditions. The depression is acute, not chronic."

OUTLAWS OF EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

"OK, I'll be so glad to, Nate, you're giving me an interest in life, Swanson's interest, I mean. I'm pretty operating the Circle K but it isn't my job and—"

"Shucks alsh sigh, so I suppose she was coming back, after all. He heaved her and he hauled, he scrupled to tell her so.

That night when he departed for the Bar H, the girl walked with him to the gate. A full moon rode high in the silver heavens, and Eden Valley was filled with the silvery light. It was a night for love, and Nate Tichenor, who had never felt his heart beat high in any woman's presence was suddenly thrilled to the core of his being at sight of Lorry Kershaw leaning over the gate. He had a sudden mad impulse to place his head under her chin and nestle like a fond calf, but he hadn't the courage to face upward and kiss her on the lips.

For the strangest of all reasons he was timid. Perhaps reared in Eden Valley; he was old-fashioned, the victim of an iron code of morals and social precedents. He failed to realize that he had been dead long enough! So he compromised and said, with an effort, "Eternally patronizing: Good night, Lorry dear. I've had a delightful evening."

But his burning eyes betrayed him. She smiled up at him mischievously. "Thanks to you, I'm happy for the first time since I went away," she said.

At his gate he stood for a little while, gazing over the hills toward Forlorn Valley. "Coyotes!" he grunted at length, and added, "Damned. Doc Donaldson, would come to her father's funeral—and not couldn't. And not one of you came to my mother's funeral either. She was an angel and Nance wasn't less than a man, but he did bump Uncle Taylor off. Well one day you'll come asking me for a favour, and when you do, by God, I'll remember and charge accordingly, Coyotes!"

INSTALLMENT XIII

Silas Babson rose next morning, his headache and self in very definite realization that he had many busy days before him. He drove over to Gold Run first, to interrogate the county recorder, from whom he ascertained that a deed to a quarter-section in Eden Valley from Nate Tichenor to the Mountain Valley Power Company and another deed for four thousand acres, from Lorraine Kershaw to the same company, had just been sent over by the First National Bank to be recorded.

"Well, he had been thwarted by this interloping power corporation, just as he had feared would be the case. But he'd show the Mountain Valley Power Company could not thwart him for long. He returned from the Department of the Interior for permission to erect a steam dam in the Rainbow Falls canon, from Eden Valley Creek down beyond the western buttress of Forlorn Valley. They might hold up issuance, but not with the congressman's influence, but with the consistency behind it.

Well, his first step was to wreak swift vengeance on the proposed irrigation district—not at all a difficult task, for the Eden Valley Gazette Register was the only newspaper in the valley and its editor, Jim Strahan, had financed his venture largely on money borrowed from the Bank of Valley Centre. Strahan would see his duty and do it boldly. He must attack the power company and pay the community's respects. In uncertain terms he would tell Eden Valley outlaws who had betrayed him or at least sought to betray them.

Suddenly as he drove home across the irrigation ditch, he was overtaken by him with such force that he jammed on his brakes and stopped in the middle of the highway so suddenly that a car coming behind him almost his car in the rear and skidded it off the right of way into a ditch. Somewhat shaken by the near wreckage unharmed, but frightened to the extreme, Silas got out of his car to come face to face with a young man emerging from a battered flivver driven by a liveried chauffeur.

"Nate's the matter with you?" he cried furiously. "Are you all gone on your own side of the road?"

Nate answer your question with another air. Why did you stop so suddenly, without giving the legal warning by thrusting your hand out? My chauffeur is not a mind-reader.

"You're wrecked my car, damn you, and you'll pay for it, by God!"

"I'm not wishful to argue that point." The young man was cold and crisp and unafraid. "I got out solely to see what you've been and done to my car. Very little, I observe. Bumper thrust back on the frame and twisted a bit, so you should have it repaired. Lucky you had no lamps on it, or you would have wo'd have knocked this peculiar person over into that alfalfa field!"

"This peculiar person knows your name and your license number," Babson shrilled.

"I'll give you my card, sir; help yourself to it. Here you are, sir. You will furnish me with your name and address of course.

"My name is Babson, and I'm a responsible and reputable citizen."

"Ah, Mr. Silas Babson. I do recognize you. My name is Nathan Tichenor, and I, too, am a responsible, but also disreputable citizen—at least in these parts."

"I beg your pardon, Nate. I did not know who you were."

"Your excuse is accepted and your apology is accepted. Sorry we couldn't avoid hitting you, Mr. Babson. However, since we've set you afoot some ge miles from the Lazy Centre we'll not detect you. Hop in and I'll take you home. You will have to send a wrecking car for that mess."

Thanks, Nate Babson stepped in. "Well, well," he began unctuously "You've changed, Nate. I should never have recognized you. Is Eden Valley to stay?"

"Perhaps. Say are things with you, Mr. Babson?"

"Fair, fair. In Forlorn Valley, like the rest of the country, is recuperating. Cattle are not selling well, but carry this doggoned valley since the post-war depression struck us."

"Well," Nate continued, "good seeds begin to get your loans in. Beef's coming up. The cattleman should certainly taken a bad licking, but while we have lost a lot of breeding stock intact will make a clean up within three years. I was saying as much to Lorry Kershaw recently. Old Ranco's estate is in a bad way and she Kershaw girl is making a bit downhearted."

"Well, she's liquidated today," Babson was pleased that his hint had opened this subject of conversation and little dreamed that Tichenor had purposely done so. "She's sold four thousand acres of worthless land her father gave her to the Mountain Valley Power Company. Must have got at least three hundred thousand dollars for it. Cleaned up the mortgage and paid old Ranco's notes." He glanced slyly at Tichenor. "Unless you chose in on her I reckon she'll work out of the hole she's in."

"I think so too. No sense crowding her, in that event. She's a capable girl and will make good if given a chance. So I'm going to give her that chance.

"By the way, I hear you've sold your dam-site to the Mountain Valley Power Company," said Babson.

"Yes, they made me an offer—a mighty fine offer, in fact, and I couldn't see any profit in respecting it.... News reaches you very promptly," he added.

"A new company, I believe. Know anything about this outfit—who's back of it and why?"

"It is a Delaware corporation capitalized for two million dollars with a license to do business in California. The corporation plans to erect a dam, impounding the flood waters of Eden Valley Creek after they have passed over the Circle K and the Bar H ranches and use the water for the production of power."

Babson now remembered the darning thought that had operated to wreck his subconscious. "You may have noticed the large number of gasoline engines on the ranches, said Nate."

"I did, and guessed the reason. The water tables are receding and with a dozen large plants scattered through the mountains. In order to consolidate his position, as before, he had already had the Mountain Valley Power Company enter into negotiations for a contract with the P. G. and E., whereby that company was to purchase all the power Tichenor companies could deliver. While this contract did not restrain his company from selling water for irrigation, Tichenor had hoped to sell water for that purpose, he would consider the proposition until quite certain he could get a fair appraisal. The production of power. Instinctively cautious, he declined to commit himself, but in a half-way promise to Babson.

He had discerned that his refusal to enter into negotiations had angered Babson, but he had no idea as to the extent of the shock.

Other than the knowledge that Babson had organized a club to ruin Lorry Kershaw, Tichenor had no cause to dislike the man, and the knowledge that he, Tichenor, had always been in position to frustrate that raid, had operated to chill the edge of the resentment of his host world was quite filled with Silas Babsons; indeed, during the past seven years in New York he had met more than one of them, had learned how to combat them, and had defeated them and been defeated by them. Such men as all in the days's work for him, and such irritation as he had felt against Babson was solely out of sympathy for Lorry Kershaw.

The impending disaster appeared to affect Babson only, he would have dismissed all thought of him.

Certainly he would not have wasted another moment on him. But without water, eventually hundreds of people in Forlorn Valley would be reduced to poverty, and with the collapse of the Bank of Valley Centre, the business men of the valley would be hastened and impoverished.

Nate Tichenor, ostracized as he had been by the people of Forlorn Valley, his life was interesting to them as all of his people had been—had, not unnaturally, acquired a fierce resentment against these people which would descend on the source that his resentment faded now before the realization of the tragedy they faced.

His heart welled with pity for them. "I have to do something about this," he decided. "I'll defer building the hydro plant for a year or two. Perhaps I'll not build the power plant. I'll shut those Forlorn Valley cattle that the despised Hensley clan managed to breed a human being and a public-spirited citizen after all."

He was possessed of a warm feel ing of elation as he motored up to the Circle K and in a field below the ranch house found Lorry with her cowboys working in the branding corral. She wore the traditional boots, overalls, shirt and hat of a cowman. She carried a four-strand hair-plaited rope of braided rawhide and bestrode a buckskin horse that knew how to handle cattle.

Tichenor climbed upon the fence and watched her work; the skilled with professional pride as her small loop went under the belly of each calf and curled up and over the legs of the calf as the little animal went forward; he observed with genuine admiration how gently she laid him down, saving the horse strain on the rope and dragged him through the soft loose dirt to the fire. Ruby Tenney, working a calf along the fence below Nate, called out the corner of his mouth as he passed:

"Ninety-two calves so far today and she hasn't milked a cow yet."

It was long since he had sat on the top rail of a corral fence, content merely to look at attractive girl looked at good stock! Long since he had done anything so idle and fascinating, long since he had known the joy of watching a keen and graceful girl do anything save an academy-trained horse.

He resolved definitely not to give it up. When the work was finished he could always come back to Eden Valley and enjoy the society of people who had mastered the great art of silent companionship.

Lorry had waved her riata at him as he took his seat on the fence, thereafter she paid no attention to him. She was busy. So he sat on the fence for an hour, dreaming and remembering, planning. Finally he saw a horse standing with drooping head, outside the corral. A riata was coiled on the pommel.

"My horse, Lorry?" he called to the girl.

"Whenever you get your job of dreaming done you'll find it saddled. He climbed down, checked the saddle tighter, and, swinging astride, "Hello, cowboy," Lorry cried joyously, and as if this was a signal the horse went into action. Tichenor stayed with him for six jumps, then sailed off into space and lit on his hands and knees in the soft dirt, whereupon everybody laughed long and joyously at his discomfiture. The horse fled away and Tichenor was standing, gazing curiously at him.

He drew up to the fence and looked at him. "What happened?" he asked solicitously. He dismounted himself up, furious with embarrassment. "I've been away a long time, I'm afraid. I can't get on like I used to," he mumbled, and caught up the horse. The horse tried to scramble him again, but this time Tichenor stuck, and the horse, decided he had had the worst of the argument, jogged sedately away to the corral gate, swung into it for Nate to slip the wooden latch, pushed it open with his shoulder, pushed it shut again and sidled humbly up to the bars for him to climb on and home again. Tichenor shook off his humiliation, and consciously and with a laugh wound the hind legs. Lorry smiled her approval and began to coil her rope, and any embarrassment melted and he smiled back.

"Nate, I bet Rube a hundred dollars you'd be out to Rube Tenney, "Taken," the superintendent replied back. "I'll bet you another hundred one call in the first five."

"Take it," Tichenor urged. Lorry laughed and shook her head for her.

"First time I ever knew a man to lay off ropin' nine years an' come back with his old nerve still," Rube Tenney complained.

"Been practicing for six years part, I've roped daily for a week in the rodeo held at Madison Square Garden," Tichenor explained. "This first time I tried it was on a private bull that was in the race with a lot of society wasters and there was a rich young lady on every horse. I'll bet I honeyed him into a bet of ten thousand dollars. I'll be mighty hog-tie a calf in twenty seconds."

"Twenty seconds, by the watch," Lorry challenged.

"Not on a borrowed horse, with a borrowed rope and an educated calf, Lorry. The crowd thought I was part of the show. When I came out in a top hat and dress clothes and tried to ride after the fourteen second."

"Did you collect the ten thousand?" the practical Mr. Tenney queried.

"I'll bet you ten thousand I can beat your time. We're about finished here for the day, and I'll bet all but four out of the corral and ride them down to the bunk house. I'll bet you a hundred dollars I can beat you. Then Rube shall open the gate and we'll start a calf from the bunk house to the corral through the gate. He'll head straight for his mother, but you shall be the dead line, and the second the calf is through it he's yours to rope and hog-tie. Rube shall be the judge and carry a stop-watch. How about it, Rube?"

"Give me a tie rope," was all he said, and Tichenor stepped over to Rube Tenney. The calf, a husky yearling, was tied two months old, then went out the gate for all he was worth. Lorry fell beyond the gate Tichenor's rope settled over his head and stopped him; even as he fell Tichenor was off the top rail of the saddle! crawling up along the calf's body, he caught the front feet in his left hand then over; then Rube Tenney inspected the tie and announced it perfect. "Fifteen and a fifth seconds, by the wood fast work, Nate."

THE ECLIPSE OF 1932

A government bulletin recently issued is a semi-invitation to the total eclipse of the sun next year. These eclipses are by no means rare, but the opportunity to observe one from a point of vantage rarely is. The last eclipse visible in Canada was that of January 24, 1925, and the next for which any part of the Dominion will be in a similarly favored position will not occur until 1954.

But, had the eclipse of 1932 been arranged for the special advantage of as many as possible of the people of Canada it could scarcely have been more perfect. Montreal and its population of a million, will be on the edge of the hundred-mile-wide belt of shadow, and the middle line of that belt—"the path of totality," as it is called—will be only fifty miles east of that city. And the time could not possibly be better—August 31 at 3.24 p.m. eastern standard time.

The bulletin already referred to indicates that the Department of the Interior is exercising a wise foresight for this unique event. The Dominion Observatory staff will be in charge, but in addition work, Mr. R. Meldrum Stewart, Director, has been over the country with a view to locating his observers at favorable points and securing other scientific parties as well as those visitors to whom the eclipse will be only a spectacle.

Unfortunately, the scientists who are able to predict with such exactitude the paths of the heavenly bodies cannot foretell whether the astronomers and other observers of the phenomenon are to be favored with a clear sky or to have their appointments dashed to pieces and consulted the records, however, and their labors will be in vain for choice of favorable conditions are about 70 to 1.

No doubt a good many people will arrange to be in Canada next year with a view to being in the middle of the path of totality at August 31 and hour fixed.—Oakville Citizen.

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 15. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Tarzan placed a foot upon the carcass of his kill and, with his handsome face raised to the full moon, gave voice to the most frightful cry that ever had smitten upon the girl's ears. With a little gasp of fear she shrank from him as the fiendish challenge died away. Had he perhaps gone mad?

Then Tarzan's eyes rested upon the fright girl and his kindly smile reassured her. "This thing you have done is unheard of," she said. "And that cry! It was not human!" But the ape-man did not explain as they continued their journey. Beyond a rivulet they found Jane grazing. Without mishap they reached the girl's village.

When his daughter recited their story to her father, the old sheik and his men surrounded Tarzan in worshipful admiration. They even wished to adopt him as a tribe member. A week he remained as their honored guest, enjoying himself hugely. Then sorrowfully he bade the girl and her people farewell and rode away.

Back now in Bou Saada, Tarzan found welcome from the officers, surprised to see him alive and unhurt. Orders from France instructed him to proceed by first steamer to Cape Town. But one thing he determined to do first, for in the sheik's village he had gathered an interesting piece of information.

FURTHER GAIN RECORDED IN STOCK MARKET

Market Opened Sluggish But Strengthened By Metal Buying

(By Claude A. Jagger)
(Associated Press Financial Editor)

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 6.—In the manner in which the wheat market was able to absorb a fresh flurry of profit taking prompted further bullish efforts in stocks today.

The stock market began the day under feebly, but was strengthened by buying of the non-ferrous metal, steel and automobile shares and the session wore on.

Finally losing 1 to 2 points in active trading, were generally recovered by early afternoon, and activity quickly spread on the upturn. Issues rising 1 to 3 points over yesterday's closing prices including Anaconda, Kennecott, Alaska, Juneau, American Metals, American Smelting, Phelps Dodge, Vanadium, Bethlehem, Joseph Lead, International Nickel, Standard Gas, Steel, Rockwell, Woolworth, Safeway, Drug Inc., Corn Products, Allied Chemical, Beatrice Creamery and Purity Bakeries. Gain of 4 to 5 appeared in Intern. Silver, Homestake Mining, Cerro de Pasco, Texas Gulf Sulphur, Zinc and Smelting. Early losses of 1 to 2 in U. S. Steel, American Telephone, Radio, Case, Chrysler and others were regained.

Fresh strength was given the metal issues by a further rise in lead silver, and by a gain of 1 cent to yesterday's 1 1-2 cent rise, bring the price to 4 cents, the highest and the highest in about a year. While sellers were few in the early hours, Copper Market were lacking, most of the Copper producers also protective standards in advance of the Gold mining stocks have been working higher for some time, moved forward commodity prices in relation to the value of the dollar and reduced production cost widening profit margins.

The money market showed an easier tone with call loans unchanged and commercial paper rates were slashed. Bankers were cheered by the fact that the net circulation gained only the normal seasonal amount in the weekly and that the federal reserve had been able to protect its volume of outstanding credit without affecting the money market.

STOCKS EASY AFTER ADVANCE

Considerable Profit Taking Noted But Prices Firm Later

TORONTO, Nov. 6. — Easier wheat prices and the fast the may fact had enjoyed this week one of the sharpest advances in a long while tended to bring on profit taking on Toronto Stock Exchange this morning and as a result the majority of stocks were fractionally easier at the end of the second hour.

Consolidated Smelters, a prime favorite Thursday afternoon, made an overnight jump of between two and three points and ended with the first half hour set a new top price for the year, but reacted with ease. This sharp advance following yesterday's rise brought out sizeable volume but after dropping back to 71 the issue steadied and worked upward again.

Page-Hersey tubes, another favourite Thursday, was steady around 71, where it was holding its gains.

Trading over the general list was not in such heavy volume today although the market remained broad.

Bell Telephone, a staid active lately moved ahead over a point, more than 3 points to above 135, B.C. Packers preferred, Dominion Bridge and Steel Corp. added small fractions.

Such a wide list of issues as Brazilian, Ford, Walkers, Steel of Canada, Canada Cement, International Nickel and C.P. R. backed and filled.

Oils as a group were also 172 lately moved ahead, Imperial closing B.A. oil was possibly the firmest of the group, straighter by 11 3-4 and later firming to 12. There was no special reason why B.A. oil should have been singled out.

Winnipeg Market Shows Collapse to Lower Levels

WINNIPEG, Man., Nov 6.—(By the Canadian Press)—Prices recorded on the Grain Market this morning.

As a result of weaker cables the market was swamped with heavy offerings and quotations were swept to much lower levels. November dropped from 1 1-2 to 69 3-8; December 1-5-8 to 2 to 67 1-2 to 67 1-2 May 1 3-4 to 3 1-8 at 73 to 71 3-4 July 2 1-2 to 2 3-4 at 73 1-4 to 73.

COMEBACK IS STAGED BY COW

Meek Cud-Chewing Sisterhood Blazes Trail to Prosperity

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 6 — The meek sisterhood of cows is blazing the trail back with third times in the northwest. What with stabling prices, which are dominant in the hopeful parade, but the cow by boring a hole crowded with the largest business at the cash windows.

While wheat and its cereal cousins are staging comeback dramas in the world's markets, the cow with her milk and butterfat has been quietly on a down with third farmers cheering for the first time in months.

Statisticians of the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank today told the story in figures arraying price increases. Private bankers and economists rounded out the story with estimates that the upward movement of grain and dairy prices in the last four months has increased the agricultural income of the area—some of it at least by nearly $65,000,000 to $85,000,000. In this estimate Canadian farmers are included, for which may find their way to market instead of being used up on their farms because of the changed price trend.

AID ONLY UPON BASIS OF LOAN

Government is Receiving Notes For Advances to Farmers

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 6 (CP) — Many farmers in the drought-stricken areas of southern Saskatchewan refused to accept assistance from the Dominion Government except on a loan basis, the government is, therefore, getting notes from all those people who are in necessitous in the 71 municipalities affected. Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, made this explanation today in reply to statements which have been made that whereas the general impression was that the assistance was to be the aid was given outright, as a matter of fact, it was in the nature of loans.

Many farmers in the stricken areas own their farms without encumberance. They had first want to be helped to keep on until through the Farm Loan Board, as well as the banks, on their mortgages. The government decided against this however. It was decided notes would be preferable to mortgages.

Although it is too early to estimate to any degree of accuracy the extent of assistance that will be required in the drought district, Mr. Weir said it was $2,000,000.00. At present the three provinces, Saskatchewan, Alberta, John Strain, Clive Burke, and Thomas Graham all expert farmers, are studying the whole situation among other things are to decide the amount and kind of seed for next spring. They are interviewing the local representative farmers in the various localities and after their reports have been received a decision will be reached as to the variety of seed the government will provide for the farmers this spring.

LAST TRIBUTE IS PAID LATE MRS. HASLETT

Representatives of Old Families Bear Body to Grave

LINK WITH PAST

Mourners Accompany Body of Pioneer From Toronto

In the beautiful old church of St. Thomas, Belleville, Ontario, whose sacred precincts many years ago she was joined in the holy bonds of wedlock to the late John Haslett, by the Rev. Mr. Greer, who was Rector of the Parish at that time, the beautiful ritual and solemn service of the Church of England was said over the body of the late Mrs. Haslett, who passed from this life in her home in Toronto on Wednesday of this week, at the remarkable age of 96 years, dred and four years. The funeral party arrived from Toronto over the Canadian National Railway at eleven fifteen o'clock and immediately the procession proceeded up the aisle of the church to the chancel steps, where as a bride, forty-five the late Mrs. Haslett had stood. It was indeed a fitting memorial service for one who during her long life had endeared herself to many many who have long since passed from this life and to many who are still live to remember her with loving thoughts. The service was conducted by the Rev. C. C. Ward Whate, Vicar of St. Alban's Cathedral, Toronto, who accompanied the funeral party to Belleville, assisted by the Rev. a. Beauchamp Pepper, Vicar of St. Thomas' Church. At the close of the service the casket was opened and some old friends looked with reverence upon the face of their friend of years ago.

The bearers were: Messrs. Alfred Ponton, Robert Ponton, H. E. Vidgen, H. C. Thompson, R. J. S. Dewar, and Col. Fonston.

Interment was made in the family plot in the Belleville Cemetery.

Those who composed the funeral party were, Mrs. and Mrs. Haslett's daughter, Mrs. Ferguson, Miss Maud Haslett and Miss Minnie Haslett of Toronto, Mrs. Ponton, Mrs. Haslett's daughter, and Mr. A. E. Parker of Hamilton. Among the others were Mr. C. Haslett, K. C., of Hamilton, son of the late Mr. Haslett who was unable to be present. GRANDE LIGNE MISSION WORK IS EXPLAINED

Progress of Circles Told By Mrs. Veal

WEST MISSIONS

Victoria Avenue Baptist Church was crowded Wednesday evening with delegates and visitors to the evening session of the annual convention of the Women's Baptist Home Missionary Society of Ontario West. The chief speakers were Rev. Aubrey W. Small, of Grande Ligne, Quebec, who addressed the meeting on the subject "Carrying His Call in Quebec" and Mrs. H. H. Bingham, of Calgary, Alberta, who spoke on "Obeying His Call in the West."

The meeting was opened by an interesting Song Service led by Miss Forman, of Belleville, with Miss La-Voie accompanist, and at the Devotional period Mrs. Bingham was presided, taking as her theme "Power Through Obedience".

Mrs. E. J. Zavitz, of Toronto, president of the Home Mission Board, was in the chair and introduced to the delegates Major George A. Reid, who extended the welcome of the city to the visitors. Mayor Reid, who said he was glad to welcome such the missionary activities of any church since he had come from a home that believed in missions, pointed out that the great mission work for winter was the organization of relief to the unemployed. He told of Belleville's preparations for the winter and concluded his remarks with the hope that the missions held in the city would be helpful and inspiring to the delegates.

Progress of Circles

Mrs. H. F. Veal, Hamilton, reported the activities of the Young Women's Missionary Societies during the year, urging the organization of more circles. Of the eighty-seven circles already organized there are over two thousand girls who contributed during the past year $8,-734.84 in mission work. There are more than one hundred churches without; missionary circles and these she added to plan the founding of such a society.

Rev. John Cristea, of Most Windsor, sang a hymn in the Rumanian tongue that was greatly enjoyed.

Mrs. Zavitz introduced one of the newest workers of the province, Rev. Aubrey W. Small, the new secretary of the Grande Ligne Mission in the Province of Quebec, who, speaking on the topic, "Obeying His Call in Quebec" explained that the Baptist Church felt justified in maintaining a mission in Quebec for the conversion of Roman Catholics.

Miss Kathleen Goodmurphy sang a splendid solo after which Mrs. H. H. Bingham, of Calgary, gave an illustrated address on Baptist work in the West. The grave need, she said, is for ministers. Baptists, who come West from Ontario and who settle in the prairie provinces, where Baptist churches are few, soon affiliate themselves with other churches and are lost to the Baptist faith. Then when the Baptist Church seeks to establish itself in their districts it is hard for them to break the ties they have formed in the church to which they now adhere.

"Calls come to us in our Assembly in the West for ministers to these fields and we cannot supply them. Then too, if we had the men, we have to send them to McMaster or to American colleges to study theology for there is no theological department at Brandon College. Then when they have graduated, there are tempted to stay rather than go back to the West and thus we lose so many."

Mrs. Bingham, who spent twelve years in Calgary, told of the thirty-seven Baptist Churches there, twenty-seven of which are supported by Home Missions. She described the camps for children and various activities of the church in the West. Typical pictures of the West were thrown on the screen. These included beautifully tinted slides of Western scenery, and glimpses of the Mission Churches there. Of particular interest was the picture of a Ukrainian wedding. Mrs. Bingham explained that a wedding festival of these people celebration continues for a week. Now that they have no liquor the festival of which is merriment and joy, with no rioting. After Mrs. Bingham's address the meeting came to a close with the singing of a hymn and Benediction pronounced by the pastor of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, Rev. A. Hilliard Jones.

FOREIGN WORK RELATED BY MISSIONARIES

Baptist Women Mission Board Hear Reports

WORK IN INDIA

Five new missionaries have been sent this year by the Women's Baptist Missionary Society of Ontario West to the foreign mission fields, said Mrs. Frank Inrig, Toronto, in presenting the Board report of the fifty-fifth year of its work in India. "One and many other interesting facts were presented at the convention in Wycome Avenue Baptist Church yesterday.

"Among the considerations that had been before the Women's Foreign Mission Board during the past year was that of how Mission Circle workers can meet the need of increase the question of annuities for their missionaries had come in for serious discussion last year with the result that these had been provided for so that when missionaries now starting out had reached the age of retirement they would be adequately provided for.

"It was with gratification that Mrs. Inrig reported that every woman in the Baptist churches had signed the resolution for peace issued by the Women's International League.

Miss Marjorie Trotter, Principal Moulton College, Toronto, conducted a period of devotion when delegates had the opportunity of asking questions concerning letters just sented. Miss Trotter suggested that delegates mention what they considered the outstanding message to bring back to their circles on their return home from the convention.

During the morning Mrs. T. L. Crossley of Toronto, contributed a vocal solo and the session closed with the devotional period led by Dr. Pearl Shute, a retired medical missionary from India. This very interesting convention visitor has the splendid distinction of being one of the few women decorated with the Kaiser-i-Hind medal by the King awarded to Dr. Shute for distinguished service in welfare work in India.

That yesterday's meeting charts explaining the scope of Baptist Mission work in India were hung about the walls. In Telugu, the field in which Ontario Baptists are especially interested 3,000 were baptized last year. There are 109 churches and 3,138 members. The average attendance at Sunday and evangelistic school is 20,160.

To combat unorganized indifference the greatest menace to the Christian Church today was one of the main problems facing Baptist women said Mrs. Albert Mathews of Toronto, in giving the president's address at the convention. For this session, Mrs. R. O. Marshall, Toronto, was in the chair. Mrs. Mathews compared the members of the mission society to those who hold the rope when a man descends a mine shaft, urged her fellow-men to "never let go as long as you live."

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Batty, Toronto, showed that giving on the part of circles and bands in Ontario West last year had been $2,000 less than in the preceding term and urged greater support. The financial statement follows:

Receipts
Balance from Investment Account	$ 31,774.74
Income from Investments	3,223.84

Administration	201.87
Rec. Gen. of Canada for Annuities	131.41
Total	$ 36,830.35

Discussion on the budget followed with Mrs. W. Pugsley, Toronto, in the chair.

Presenting the report of the Foreign Correspondence Secretary, Mrs R. W. E. Burnaby, Toronto, said that never were hearts more open in India to receive the Gospel message. The native churches in India grow stronger and there are increased numbers of natives trained for mission leadership. The purchases of work in India were medical, educational and evangelistic. Mrs. Burnaby explained the statistics of the Mission work in India and in the native churches introduced to the convention the missionaries who were present at the session. They included Miss McLaughlin, who is to return in a few days to Cocanada, Miss Holmes from the mission field of Ruhira, Dr. Cook, a woman medical missionary who also spoke of the many opened doors that cannot be entered, because of the lack of workers, and Miss Jones of India.

Glimpses of the missionary's work in India were brought to the attention of the delegates by Miss Pratt, a returned missionary, in her address this afternoon. Miss Pratt is teacher at the Cocanada Girls' School. Its teaching includes elementary work and teacher training. Many applications are received for places of education supervised by the government. Final examinations are those prescribed by government. Five Belleville girls in native costume illustrated the explanation of the various parts.

The elementary training extended to the fifth standard, a good education for the village girl. Work continuing through sixth, seventh and eighth standards received High School entrance certificates and paid yearly entrance fees. The High School, boarding at the Cocanada School. They often became nurses teachers or Bible teachers.

In order that knowledge of the three "R.'s" was deemed most necessary but at the Cocanada Mission School the three "R's" are remembered—the head, the hand and the heart. The intellectual side of education, the training of the hands to be useful and spiritual development, the most important of all, were up into programmes of the school.

"The girls go back to their homes and are witnesses for Christ among the villages," concluded the speaker.

After the quiet hour, at which Mrs. Percy Buck, India, presided the business session was conducted by "The Link and Visitor", C.G.I.T. and Young Women's work.

Board members elected at yesterday's meeting: Mrs. Jonathan Hooper, Toronto. Mrs. M. L. McLean, St. Catharines, Mrs. H. H. Bingham, Toronto, Mrs. A. Heliyer, Waterford, Mrs. Frank Bandaugh, Brantford, Mrs. James Crash, Toronto.

Dinner in honour of Missionaries was given in the church parlours last evening. The long tables were very attractively decorated in yellow with bowls banked in sprigs and the floral decorations. The welcome to the visitors was expressed by Mrs. A. Hilliard Jones and Miss McLaurin of the Mission field in India, replied.

British Art Arises from Foreign Sway

LONDON—"At last the invention of British by foreign artists seems to have received a check," says Guy N. Bernard, art critic of The News Chronicle. "They have held our stage for far too long. Who, though, shall blame them when they have been so ardently encouraged by the patriots?

"Our artists are themselves largely to blame for being without honor in their own country. Too many of them have wasted years in fatuous imitation of continental art, in order to attract so-called collectors who leave them up a disappointing alley, and turn to a new foreign fashion every ten minutes. Thus, many British artists have lost the real type of patron without finding a new one.

"And now, suddenly, we are entering upon a British season. Algernon Talmage is showing his paintings of London's Regency houses, at the Leicester Galleries. The still canal and Thames water, the sun's glow from behind clouds, and the weaker light ordered detail in a general broad scheme, give these pictures an air of distinguished elegance. It is an urbane rather than austere, with a hint of a satirical wit, gentle, light-reflecting colors. They have been painted with deep sincerity of feeling, but there are no human figures painted with his crisp touch—for, as he is confessed, his frequent mechanical glitter. We can be proud of such a painter.

"So can we be of Paul Nash, Edmund Kapp and others at the Tooth's Gallery. This exhibition is the Modern Developments in British Painting,' but I am inclined to see in it the latest phase of a British movement of French abstract art—perhaps the last before a reaction sets in. Some of these paintings are so cold and hard in their application to traditionally planned that not a human flicker remains. I like them, now, but I would no more choose them for permanent companionship than a man with a helping forehead and a shrivelled heart.

"Mr. Nash is really a nature lover and a highly original artist. Both he and Kapp have been so much obscurely surpassed their latest efforts. Of the younger artists that is best written that 'their earlier work was best? In the search for perfection, it is easy to run past the goal.

"It is time more of our artists left the architect British characteristics that undoubtedly lie underneath their many confusing slaves to a continental mentality. They have decided by a tide-flow which is really ebbing."

Fashion Flashes

By Alice Alden

Economy is in fashion and when it means silver fox it isn't hard to stand. A collarette of black caushmere suede, cut on surplice lines, achieves new smartness when it is ready to go out to a party. For that is added a detachable collar and capelet of silver fox. The fur is mounted on fabric ends that cross and join at the back.

All buttoned up is a quaint frock of brown velvet. It has a round neck collar that is buttoned from the neck to the pointed waistline with jewelled buttons. There are wide crochet cuffs and a rounded neck band of crochet. The skirt is gored.

Bustle about in our new bustle frock. College girls are endorsing it and the evening frock with back effect. One campus shop is showing an evening frock of black taffeta with ruffles placed low on the skirt and shirred bustle bow at back. The shoulders are covered by a lifelal embroidered lace ruffle.

A new way of keeping warm is to trim one's hat with fur. The hat of black velvet has two twist tails that form a side band for the fur collarette to rest on the back. Then a tricorne turban of dark red velvet has one side of a narrow brim turned up and faced with sloupard.

Breakfast in bed is grand when you have a delightful bed jacket to wear. A nice new model is made of satin, lined with quilted chiffon and is trimmed with a collar and cuffs made of pink and blue ostrich.

A gem of a formal afternoon dress is made of suede of onyx. The model is of onyx circles set in gold with pearl centres. The choker is of the same design with three motifs of onyx and a fine-cut gold fringe.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Follett

Whenever the yen to reduce comes along, the ambitious adorer of the fine figure immediately starts think not only of her figure but also of her face. Massage usually dissolves cushions of tissues that give the face its natural contour, and the result is not only flabbiness in the flesh but an expression of fatigue. Any fat fighter should be content if she can lose a pound of weight a month, she should, while carrying on the war against a disgrace tissue treat her complexion to anointings with a heavy cream, astringent lavings and ice rubs.

Why some auburn haired girls insist upon wearing brown nobody knows. It's not their best color, by any means, and a head with pale skin wears black splendidly. Green blues are a good bet for her. She should select ivory or beige in preference to dead white, though that rule holds good with girls of almost all colorings. Mauve yellow, lavender and plum are friendly to auburn hair.

To protect teeth against the formulation of food chemicals that attract bacteria brush after each meal. If brushing is inconvenient at lunch time, rinse the mouth with clear water. Never neglect the scrubbing at bedtime. Use dental floss once a day.

The hair is grateful for regular attention. Before going to bed the supplicant for ambrosial locks should give her scalp a five minute massage then rumple the hair so it stands on end and enjoys an air bath. The hygienic measure is particularly helpful when the scalp is inclined to perspire and dandruff collects.

Face lifting is a scientific job. It is being done all the time, with happy results, but one cannot be too careful in the choice of the surgeon. Incisions are made at the temples back of the hair line, the flesh is lifted, a tuck taken and snipped out, flesh stitched together again.

MOOSE ACTS AS ROAD-HOG

Resourceful Cleric is Able to Outwit Creature

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Nov. 5 (CP)—The story of the moose that hogged the road will not be told here last night. Rev. W. S. Butt of Blind River almost met the moose when he overtook a moose trotting on the road near Sault Ste.

Sounding his horn, he attempted to pass the animal. But the moose's march of the bush had no intention of being passed. He swung into the centre of the road and threw up a barrage of gravel and mud over Mr. Butt's car.

At a curve in the road, however, the minister saw his opportunity. The moose took the outside track and Mr. Butt swept past him on the inside. The moose made off into the bush.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Nov. 5.—Algoma moose, besides being able to climb a tree and take care of themselves in other ways, have hands and yodel—as witness the experiences of the past few years—are not now revealed as dirty racers on the dirt track.

Rev. W. S. Butt of Blind River, has exposed them in their true colors. He was driving on the Trunk Road, near Thessalon. In the darkness his car came upon a moose, bounding along at a loping trop.

The clergyman, a consistent driver, after giving the usual signals of hand and horn, swung out to pass.

But the moose didn't want to be passed. He wanted to race. So he crowded over into the centre of the road and deliberately threw up a barrage of gravel and mud on the Rev. Mr. Butt to draw behind or have his windshield broken.

The next time the minister drew up close behind, the moose kicked a film of mud on the windshield.

At the next turn, however, the moose made a fatal error. He made the curve on the outside track and the clergyman hugged the post and managed to get past in spray of mud and stones.

The moose gave up at being fooled, made for the bush.

Will Have to Draw on St. Lawrence River

TORONTO, Nov. 5 (CP)—It is only a matter of a few years before the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission will have to draw power from the St. Lawrence River to meet its increasing demands for power and light Hon. C. G. Challies, provincial secretary, addressed the Toronto Electric Club yesterday.

Cost of power in Ontario consumers depended largely upon the distribution made by the Federal government and the co-operation of the Lawrence Waterway project, he declared.

The Province of Quebec produced more than 4,700,000 pounds of maple sugar in the spring of 1931.

OBSTACLES ARE PILING UP

Democrats Will Have Hard Time Appeasing All Branches

Washington, D.C., Nov. 5 (AP)—Obstacles previously heaped upon Republican shoulders have already begun to pile before the eyes of Democratic leaders flushed with the sapping crest of Tuesday's election victories.

The tidal wave sweep of A. Harry Moore back into the New Jersey governorship and of Franklin D. Roosevelt's political chieftains with record-breaking majorities in State after State, so clouded the issue as to the safety of these visitors. Dreiser had telegraphed the Governor-saying he would hold the chief executive responsible for any harm that might come to members of his committee.

Democratic leaders, however, already have begun to realize that the party's success has created a number of problems which will require careful handling if party harmony is to be maintained.

Democratic leaders in the House of Representatives, however, said elevation of the veteran Jack Garner, of Texas, to the speakership, have brought their problems.

Democratic leaders were given the difficulties of legislating without a working majority—a majority now standing at one—in the recently ended peace in the Democratic family. This may not prove so easy with the chairmanships of the most powerful and important committees scheduled to go to Southern members through the right of seniority.

The party present lineup, not only would Garner be unopposed in the party for the Speakership, but 30 or 46 chairmanships of standing committees would go to Dixie Congressmen. Texas alone would get five.

The effort by the Tammany delegation from New York and other Northern members Northern States to force a more equitable division of the committee spoils is already down in the future books.

No Place in Law for Dishonest Men

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 5—There is no place in law for dishonest men, declared Hon. H. H. Price, Ontario Attorney General, in opening the Osgoode Hall Conservative Club here last night. "Unfortunate conditions existed in Canada for young men in the legal profession," he said.

"It should be part of your duty to keep the profession clean, to frown down those practices, which make the public and the profession feel that a lawyer is dishonest. The States is looking to the law to elevate the profession by honesty and hard work," said Col. Price.

TERROR REIGNS IN COAL AREA

Writers Led By Dreiser Supported By State Troops

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 5—Detachment of State troops were ordered to Harlan County today while a committee of writers led by Theodore Dreiser, novelist, assembled as a possible vanguard of a movement entering the coal fields to investigate what Dreiser calls a "reign of terror" in Kentucky mining camps bordering Tennessee.

The tidal wave sweep of A. Harry Moore back into the New Jersey governorship and of Franklin D. Roosevelt's political chieftains with record-breaking majorities in State after State, so clouded the issue as to the safety of these visitors. Dreiser had telegraphed the Governor, saying he would hold the chief executive responsible for any harm that might come to members of his committee.

MANY WORKERS ARE TAKEN ON

Crews on C.P.R. and C.N.R. Moved Off Spare List, Others On

Many men have been taken off the "spare list" and put back on regular list. Additional train crews have been sent from Vancouver to work on the mountain division.

Reports from Calgary indicate increased train and engine crews to cope with enlarged movement of grain.

FORECAST OF ACCIDENT TOLD

Mrs. Hisey Reported to Have Foretold Event

Barrie, Ont., Nov. 5.—The trial of Robert Elliott, charged with Mrs. C. Castle, charged with the murder of Mrs. Elizabeth Hisey, wife of a Methodist minister, was interrupted in fourth day this morning. Evidence for the defence that Mrs. Hisey's will was heard yesterday afternoon and an adjournment was night fifteen witnesses were yet to testify.

Mrs. Hisey's original will, giving her home to Elliott, bequeathed $1 to her daughter while the rest of the estate was to be divided between the sons and daughter, was entered as an exhibit. Also exhibited was a draft of a will which the daughter swore was in Elliott's handwriting, and which made him the sole executor and gave only the house to the daughter, and left Mrs. Hisey, on the remainder to be disposed of "as he sees fit."

The will which Elliott is alleged to have drawn up, and the draft of which was brought to Barrie, has since been lost, so far as the known is concerned, but several people are witnesses, who were heard at the preliminary hearing, were quoting who will testify that they drew up the will, legally, for Mrs. Hisey, who, it is alleged, was prompted by Elliott.

Throughout the day Elliott and Castle followed the evidence closely—one of the last witnesses heard was Mrs. Florence Velma Bates, a neighbor of the late Mrs. Hisey.

Sworn Writing

Mrs. Bates said that on one occasion when Mrs. Hisey was at Penetanguishene, Elliott had called her (the witness) to her mother's room, and requested her to witness her, which she identified in court with Mrs. Hisey's name on it. Mr. White read his contents which said: "She left all her possessions to her husband."

Mr. Elliott asked me if it was all right," said the witness, and I said I didn't know anything about it." Elliott then left the room and came in and asked mother if she was ready to sign her will. The day before, mother spoke of going by train with Castle. Elliott called Castle a fool for going by train and in a little while he came down with a car and told her husband to use the car, saying that mother wanted to go by car.

"They left about one o'clock. When they left mother said good-bye to us all and went out. She came back about 4 o'clock," witness said, "if you hear of an accident, you'll know it's me."

William Bates, husband of the previous witness, corroborated his wife's story.

Celiophus King, only son of Mrs. Hisey, related how Elliott had introduced Castle to him as "Mr. Sheen" at a time when Castle said he learned, however, after that his right name was Castle.

"As mother was going away, she said she wouldn't shake hands with us," said the lad. "She said to her, 'go on, I wouldn't shake hands with you.' I was puzzled as she left were: 'If you hear of an accident you'll know it's me.' I believed of the accident between 10 and 11 p.m. and left for Niagara Falls."

While the funeral was preparing to leave the house, I spoke Elliott in the hall upstairs, he told me: "Bob is all right now, he's living up!" I said I wasn't making up any trouble, but I thought that I was going to all the lawyer's, doctors and ministers. And I was investigating my mother's death. He said I was a good stop," continued King, "that there was no use, he could fight as well as I could."

Real Prelims are Lined Up

Frank Hart, of Holland, and Bob Nelson in Semi-Windup

When Alex Kasalodi, the Pittsburgh Pole, and Jack "Kogut" Canadian in their finish bout at the wrestling show at the Arena next Tuesday evening the feature will be backed by a particularly attractive semi-final in which two 175 pounders with brilliant wrestling will clash in the action.

Frankie Hart of Holland has been matched with Bob Nelson of Denmark for a contest which will go forty-five minutes unless one of the men is able to score a fall within that time. Both have been found reliable opponents and to judge by their showings of late are currently close by matched.

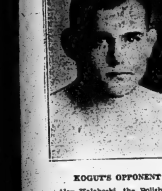
Hart learned his wrestling in Europe and has had some of the best men in the old country as his tutors. He is as clean-cut an athlete as could be found in any sport. In street clothes he looks like a model for a picture actor than a wrestler. Beautifully-built, with handsome features and crisp wavy hair he has often been termed "the Adonis of wrestling." In wrestling togs the Hollander shapes up differently. He has the build of a perfect athlete, with big shoulders, deep chest, beautifully muscled arms and narrow waist with with lean but powerful legs.

Nelson, slightly more rugged than Hart and perhaps not as fast, is certainly his equal when it comes to wrestling science. He uses a variety of holds with good effect and is most dangerous when in difficulties. The pair should be able to maintain a fast pace and provide plenty of exciting action.

Addition of a thirty-minute bout will complete the card which should provide one of the most interesting sport programs seen here in some time.

Argos Will Try to Take Wheelers

M. A. A. A. Have Yet to Lose Game in Big Four Due to Stevens



TORONTO, Nov. 6 (CP)—With a heavy week's training schedule concluded by the majority of clubs in the inter-provincial and intercollegiate rugby unions, only slight signal drills and light workouts for scrubs will occupy the time of senior gridders tonight in preparation for Saturday's league fixtures.

Twenty-four players will make the trip to Montreal this evening when Toronto Argonauts leave for the eastern city to engage the undefeated Winged Wheelers in an important game Saturday. Coach Orange opes the dope and hand the Montrealers a reverse. Both clubs have a chance of finishing on top of the big four group, providing the Winged Wheelers fail to take Ottawa in the final fixture of the schedule.

The other inter-provincial contest is carded for Hamilton, where the Tigers engage Cliff Argue's Rough Riders. Following a stiff week's drill Coach Billy Hughes has intimated he will use seven of the Hamilton O. R. F. U. squad in the second contest.

Ottawa so far have failed to break into the win column but the capital's city squad are journeying to Tiger town with hopes of avenging their defeat at home three weeks ago, when the Rengals won the game by a single point.

With a third successive inter-collegiate title in their grasp, Harry Batstone, will take his Queen's squad to London tomorrow to tackle Western. Should the Kingston aggregation down the Mustangs the college trophy will remain in the Limestone City for another season.

KOGUT'S OPPONENT

Alex Kalabodi, the Polish Dragon, who will oppose Jack Kogut, the Canadian light heavyweight champion, in the main bout of the wrestling card presented by the Belleville Amateur Athletic Association at the Belleville Arena Gardens next Tuesday night. Kalabodi is one of the real villians of the "rassling" game and seems to like it when the fans give him the "merry razz." Alex knows all the holds that are applied by the wrestlers and is both aggressive and fearless during his bouts and although he fares do less than fair by his vilious attacks on his opponents but they all admit that he is one of the best exponents of the game in the business.

HAS A SUPER TEAM UNDER HIS WING

Too much credit cannot be given Clarry Foran for the amazing success this season of the Montreal Winged Wheelers, almost champions of the Interprovincial Rugby Union, and conquerors twice in succession of the far-famed Hamilton Tigers. Clarry, without little assistance early in the season from Frank Shaugnessy, has turned out what can be called a super team—one that might also turn the trick back for the team he now coaches. Only one quarter back for the present crop of coaches, Clarry has developed two of the best Canadian football players in the game. Also, they excel in the forward passing game, and have put the new play on the map more than any other team has failed to date. It must have been a great triumph for Foran to trim the Tigers, particularly for his old coach, Billy Hughes was leading the Hamilton team this year. When Hughes left Montreal after three years with M.A.A.A. there were loud predictions from Tiger fans that they have turned their cheers—for Clarry Foran.

Jim Londos Wins in Straight Falls

Greek Wrestler Too Good For Mike Ramano in Big Tilt

TORONTO, Nov. 6 (CP) — Jim Londos, recognized by the New York State Athletic Commission as heavyweight wrestling champion of the world, succeeded in retaining his title here last night when he took a decisive fall victory from Mike Ramano, Italian star. Ramano was recognized as the champion and as a result Londos took two straight falls in quick succession.

One of the largest crowds to witness a restling bout in Toronto jammed their way into the arena to see the Greek grappler in action. From the opening gong the champion went to work on his opponent and had the challenger in trouble many times before he finally pinned him with an airplane whirl and body slam in 18.45. Londos had much difficulty in making his way to the ring through the crowd of more than 9,000 blocking the entrance door to get a close glimpse of the man who had defeated all opponents in and around New York City.

Ramano was completely recovered from the effects of the heavy slam in the first session when he returned for the second fall. He planned a split hold on Londos at the start and followed up shortly after with a double toe hold which Londos found difficult to break. After hurling Ramano from the ring the Greek wrestler grasped an opportunity and with a series of headlocks he pinned Romano up and again pinned him to the canvas with an aeroplane whirl and slam.

Mickey Walker Meets Stribling

Bout in Making For Madison Square Garden in December

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 6.—Mickey Walker's third chance at a ranking heavyweight probably will come against Young Stribling in Madison Square Garden December 11 for the New York Charity Christmas Fund. Negotiations have reached the point where Stribling's handlers have agreed to the match, which, if completed, will send the Macon heavyweight against a major opponent for the first time since his decisive defeat by Max Schmeling in Cleveland last July 3.

—Walker, who beat Johnny Risko at Miami in February and drew with Jack Sharkey here this summer, originally offered his services to the Christmas Fund with the idea of meeting Sharkey again. The Boston sailor, however, turned down the bout.

Some observers professed doubt as to whether Walker's manager, Jack Kearns, would agree to the Stribling match.

They pointed out that prospects of a title match between Walker and Schmeling in Los Angeles February 22 recently have looked very rosy and they doubted whether Kearns would jeopardize such a bout by sending Walker against Stribling.

A definite decision as to the Walker-Stribling tangle was expected within a day or two.

NEWSPAPER PROBLEMS

We see that two of the "rankers", billed for the bouts at the Belleville Arena, Monday next next Tuesday night, were incidental on the card that Maxie Markoff Corcoran presented in Toronto last night. They were Jack Kogut, the Canadian light heavyweight champion, and Bob Nelson, the Danish wonder. Both boys made a big hit at the Toronto Arena Gardens last night and this should be welcome news to local wrestling fans.

Bob Nelson, the champion of Denmark, will meet Frankie Hart of Holland in the semi-final bout on Tuesday night. The bout is to be one full rei to exceed forty-five minutes. Hart learned his wrestling in Europe and had some of the best tutors that could be procured "across the pond." He is sometimes referred to as the "Dutch Adonis" as he is one of the finest built men who graces the "rassling" ring.

Nelson on the other hand is more of the rugged nature and uses his brute strength against his opponent's skill. He is also referred to at times as the "Danish Lion" because of his great fighting spirit.

Over at the Y. M. C. A. instructor Ralph Morden has form ed a class in basketball there or perhaps we should say leagues as there are two groups. In the four teams in the midget loop, five teams in the juvenile league, and four girls' teams. This causes considerable interest, in the Y.M.C.A. circles, for the younger set. The league games will start next week.

Harry Robinson, manager of Belleville's promising lightweight Jack Lang, dropped into the office yesterday afternoon long enough to tell us that he had secured another girls' team to "scrapper" in Toronto. The win which Jack Lang will meet on another card next Monday night at the Toronto Armouries. Matchmaker Brown of the Shamrock Club was very pleased with the way the boys as he asked Robinson to bring another fighter with Jack Lang. Harry has not made up his mind just how he will take along with him as yet.

Lawrence "Gilly" Goyer, received official word yesterday that he has been given his release by Hamilton Tigers and will report for fall training at Duluth, Minn., at a moment's notice. "Gilly" was the leading scorer in the American Soccer League during the season of 1929 and 1930. He is at present holding down a full time service to the St. Louis "Flyers" and according to press reports is doing a good job too.

There is a movement on foot, locally, to form a league in industrial teams in the Hastings County League. It is understood that Madoc and Tweed are in favor of letting into the loop an industrial team from Belleville. This would give the local fans a chance to see the brand of hockey that is played in the north country during the season. There will be more developments later.

Max Lichtenfield, of the University of Pennsylvania football team, is said to be the largest man in football today. He is well over six feet and weighs 252 pounds. He wears a size 56 jersey.

George Calhoun, aged 36, walked 136 hours to be first in line to buy a bleacher ticket for the 1931 basketball games of the world series, played this season in Philadelphia. This is the longest such vigil on record.

The Dog and the Pound

Would you like to have a fine black and white male Spaniel dog in your home—a dog who would be an interesting and loyal companion for yourself or the children? If so, make haste to visit the 'dog keep' for Thomas Thorne, the city officer in charge of strays, and you will find he has in his care just such a dog as is mentioned here. The reported owner does not know why he is kept shut up in this strange place—he would like to be out in the open—he would like to have a kind master, at whom he could look with adoration showing in his eyes—someone who would rub his ears and pat him on the head. If such a master does not come by his rescue very soon, Mr. Thorne will of necessity and according to the city regulations, be compelled to bring to an end the life of this fine black and white Spaniel.

Surely there is some one who will go at once to the 'dog keep' and say to this homeless little Spaniel: "Come along 'old chap', you and I are going to be friends there is a nice, warm, spot in my home, where you will be comfortable this winter."

Mrs. McLaughlin, who was interested herself in behalf of dumb animals, charged that farmer Schroeder didn't do right by his pigs, in that he starved them and failed to provide proper living quarters and she alleged he was cruel. A justice of the peace found him guilty as charged and recently was acquitted by a jury in a higher court. In his suit Schroeder charged slander and mal prosecution.

SUB NORMAL PROBLEM IN SOUTH AFRICA

One Child in Ten is Below Normal, Says Report

CHUBB EXPLAINS

Report Given to General Botha, Supt. Gen. of Education

CAPE TOWN, South Africa—One out of every ten school children in South Africa is below normal mentally, tests conducted for the department of education have shown.

A summary of an inter-departmental report made to M. C. Botha, superintendent-general of education, recently was outlined before a meeting of the Cape Town Association of University Women by Dr. Elsie Chubb, medical inspector of schools for Cape Province.

The report, said Dr. Chubb, began by making a distinction between the sub-normal and the mentally deficient. "The sub-normal were those incapable of completing the primary course of education, i. e., of passing their sixth standard. The mental deficient was one incapable of living in ordinary social conditions without some measure of control. Mental deficients varied from the low-grade idiot who was completely incapable of self-help through the less helpless imbecile to the high-grade mental defectives who could not support themselves entirely under modern conditions.

A number of intelligence tests worked out by an expert as appropriate to South African children and revised by Dr. Cyril Burt, the psychologist of the London County Council, had been applied to representative South African children. By their use about twenty-five per cent. of the school population of the Union of the ages of 10, 11 and 12 had been tested. The results had been confined to children of these years because the very smallest child could get through his sixth standard and leave school at 12.

The result of the test was to establish the computation that about one in ten of South African school children have an intelligence quota below 80 and are thus classed as sub-normal, that is, they have not the mental capacity to pass their sixth standard. The proportion varied from 2.22 per cent. in the largest towns to 14.5 per cent. in the sparsest rural areas.

The large proportion of the low-grade in the country districts is attributed to the tendency of those who could afford it to send their brighter children to the town schools the tendency, especially in former generations, to encourage the brighter individuals to go up in the world, making a farmer of the dull boy; the large emigration from the position of farms, of those with most initiative by sale of it and leave the land to the listless. Though every effort had been made to protect the test as fair as possible, yet it might be a little more suited to the town than the country child.

The report also showed that it was not so much failure in intelligence as in character which was producing the poor white. An experiment was made of feeding a number of sub-normal children and leaving them in good circumstances for two years, and at the end of the time it was found that, though their physique, their carriage, and their general adult-ed had improved, their intelligences remained the same. This showed that good food was a necessary preliminary in any educational system which was to be of value to the people.

The report also pointed out that South Africa was a peculiarly difficult place for the sub-normal, who were definitely unfitted to become skilled workers. In country districts it was still possible that they could make their way through life without any outside control, but in towns where they found they had to compete with laborers working for 75 cents a day and yet try to live at the skilled worker's standard of $5.00 a day they found conditions quite hopeless. A country like South Africa with its large unskilled labor market of semi-civilized, needed a far higher intelligence than the lowest rung of its civilized inhabitants if he was to avoid their own

SCOUTING FOR CRIP-

PLED BOYS

Scout training for boy patients in children's hospitals has been attracting the attention of medical authorities. Those of the Shriners' Hospital, Montreal, the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto, and the Queen Alexandre Solarium, Vancouver Island, are credited with materially helping the boys concerned. Their acceptance into the great World Brotherhood of boys, and the discovery that they can do many of the Scout tests, gives the handicapped lads a new outlook on life.

At The Belle

STIRRING ZANE GREY STORY BROUGHT TO LIFE IN FILM

O'Brien-Churchill, Beery, Lesle Filmed in the picturesque Verde Valley of Arizona where Zane Grey placed the character of his widely read story, "Riders of the Purple Sage," the Fox action drama of the same name makes its local debut at the Belle today, with George O'Brien as the famed "Lassiter" heading the featured cast, consisting of Marguerite Churchill, Noah Beery and Yvonne Pelillier.

"Riders Of The Purple Sage" is the dramatic story of a man's single handed fight to protect the life and interests of a beautiful girl, threatened by an organized band of cattle jumpers, cattle thieves and outlaws. The story is replete with romance, in fact, the love theme is the principal motivating force

A mountain avalanche, a cattle stampede and a breath-taking race of relayed horses are typical of the many spectacular moments of the picture.

It presents also the most ambitious and costly exterior setting ever built by a Hollywood motion picture company miles away from the home studio. This setting is a complete ranch house of the period of 1876, with barns, granaries, corrals, carriage sheds and stockades. This ranch house is destroyed by fire in one of the most amazing scenes ever brought to the screen.

George O'Brien and his fellow players, during filming of the picture, made their homes in a camp that was a miniature city under canvas.

All sorts of natural forces and hazards were encountered and combatted by Director Hamilton MacFadden and his staff. Almost daily thunder storms peculiar to this region made work difficult, and the extreme heat of mid-day made it necessary to start the cameras shortly after dawn, continue shooting until noon and then call a rest until 3 P.M., when the company was re-assembled to work until seven at night.

In addition to the above feature attraction another of the popular "Screen Curiosities, revealing entertaining and strange freaks of nature, a funny Talkartoon, Jimmy Gleason in a laughed-packed comedy-"Slow Poison", and the Belle Orchestra with its up-to-the-minute News events garned the world over will also be exhibited.

A new process produces a transparent picture—or a print on paper—in which objects seem to have actual depth.

"FRIENDS AND LOVERS" AT THE CAPITOL

Headed by a cast of distinguished players, including Adolphe Menjou, Lily Damita and Erich von Stroheim, "Friends and Lovers" a sumptuous dramatic talkie of high loves, patriotism and friendships, opened last night at the Capitol Theatre.

Tells of Upper Society

This RKO-Radio Picture, established by sterling dialogue and vivid action, moving from London to Paris, to India, is a stirring photoplay. It tells the simple story of a woman, loved by two men who are comrades, one in the British 'InGan service, but who find friendship greater than their loves. That, substantially, is the plot; but its development under the expert hands of Director Victor Schertzinger brings out the shadings of emotion which makes "Friends and Lovers" a thrilling talkie.

Excellent Cast

Lily Damita as the woman whose beauty is the talk of London's drawing rooms; Erich von Stroheim, as the monster who is her husband and who uses her; polite and scrobulous blackmail; Adolphe Menjou, as the lover whose affection has returned, and Lawrence Olivier, as the young lieutenant who is another of von Stroheim's victims, all play magnificently with a fine appreciation for the high-dramatics of their roles.

Young Oliver has a striking resemblance in features and voice to Ronlad Colman, and in this, his first talkie part following his stage success of York in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," he scores high.

"Friends and Lovers" will be seen for the last time tonight. An amusing comedy, a travelogue and a cartoon precedes the feature.

"DAWN TRAIL" AT THE CAPITOL, SATURDAY ONLY

Buck Jones, famous film actor who is seen in "The Dawn Trail," the new Columbia "western" which will be shown at the Capitol on Saturday only.

Never has this dashing exponent of the Western type of melodrama appeared to better advantage than in the new picture, which not only gives him an opportunity to thrill his audience with daring riding stunts, but supplies him at the with a good acting role.

The locale of the story is the Panhandle district of Texas. The conflict that stars the action is due to the fact that sheepherders have invaded this famous cattle country. The cowmen combine to drive the invaders out, and a merry war ensues. Young Larry Williams, the country sheriff faces a baffling situation when Mani Denton, son of

WAVE HAND TO STARVING MEN

One Victim of Exposure Dies—Other Recovering

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Mumbling deliriously during Thursday, one of the two men rescued yesterday by a coast guard cutter after spending nine harrowing days at sea in an open motorboat, died late Wednesday in Staten Island Hospital. His brother-in-law, David Warhauer, is recovering from the effects of hunger and exposure in the same hospital.

The story told by Warshauer was that their new motorboat drifted out to sea on October 25, when its motor went bad. Day after day, without food or water, they rocked on in the swell.

Twice they saw ships pass. One liner came so close to them that they could hear the orchestra music. The passengers waved to them from the deck rails, not realizing the men were in danger.

It rained several times, and by using their coats to absorb the water they managed to get a little water to drink. At one time they became so thirsty that they broke open a small fire extinguisher and drank the chemical fluid it contained.

When day after day passed with no sign of a rescue, and with Turby ner growing so weak he could not move about, the two men reached an agreement that if one or the other was rescued, he would be responsible for the care of the other's family.

Complete Manuscript The Little Minister Secured After 40 Yrs.

New York, N.Y., Nov. 5— The original autograph manuscript of one of the best known of modern books has arrived here from Great Britain. "The Little Minister" by Sir J. M. Barrie.

For some time the incomplete manuscript of Barrie's famous book, owned by a private collector in England, was known to be for sale through his agent. Because of its incompleteness, however, it had failed to find a buyer, even though Barrie manuscripts are among the rarest of those of all modern writers; the seventy-nine page manuscript of his "Better Dead", for instance, having brought 2,400 pounds at auction in London.

Late last winter, Gabriel Wells, who now spends most of his time in England, and has just returned to the United States, had acquired the original proofsheets of "The Little Minister." Thinking that after forty years since Barrie had completed the book, the author might like to see the proofsheets again, Mr. Wells wrote to ask if he might send them. Sir James replied, inviting Mr. Wells to call and bring them himself.

Meanwhile, Mr. Wells had bought the manuscript of "The Little Minister" and took this to show Sir James. About eighty pages of a total of 480 words were missing. Before the visit was concluded, Sir James had agreed to complete the manuscript by writing again the missing pages—a task which ultimately required six or seven weeks.

What induced Sir James to undertake the work, Mr. Wells declining to reveal, Sir James has the reputation of being one of the most critizing of present day authors. Even the letters are rare as are also inscribed copies of his books. Barrie's handwriting is so small that the words which he found space for in eighty odd pages would fill twice or three times as much paper if written in the autograph of the average person; so that the completion of the manuscript was not an easy task.

Small as it is, the handwriting of Sir James today is larger than when he first completed "The Little Minister." The 404 sheets which Barrie finished in January, 1891, were written in a minute hand and are meticulous. There are few corrections. The recruit pages are written i na slightly larger hand, equally tidy, but somewhat more angular than that of the earlier sheets.

Even after Sir James had agreed to supply the missing manuscript, an uncertainty arose which Mr. Wells feared might complicate the task. Where would paper be obtained of the size and type which Sir James had used for the first manuscript? Barrie dismissed Mr. Wells's apprehension by saying that he still used stationery of the same size.

U.F.C. ORGANIZED IN SASKATCHEWAN

SASKATOON, Sas., Nov. 5.—By the Canadian Press)—Organization of Saskatchewan by the United Farmers' party is completed today, though officers of the provincial body have not been named. Committees have been formed in 62 constituencies, the party revised being turned down in one riding and deferred in another.

Organization for the party is being handled by United Farmers of Canada (Saskatchewan section.) J. F. Herman, vice-president of the U.F.C., has referred to the parallel existing between the programmes of the Farm Party and the Independent Labor Party of the province, claiming that farmers and labor hold 96 per cent. of the province's ballot-casting power.

HISTORY OF SYSTEM OF EDUCATION IN QUEBEC IS TRACED

MONTREAL—Discussing the educational system of Quebec before a delegation of Toronto teachers here recently D. C. Logan, superintendent of schools under the Protestant Board of School Commissioners of Montreal, said it presented "bewildering differences of organization when compared with the Ontario schools or those of any other province in the Dominion."

Tracing the history of the local system Mr. Logan showed how popular education was much are general in France in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries than it is now commonly supposed to have been. The means of education were then to a very great extent, if not altogether the gift of the religious orders to the people. It was natural, therefore, that in new France we should find the same influences, and the same institutions and attitudes. "There was every reason to believe that at the time of the cession the colony was well supplied with schools directed by one or other of the religious orders. The Jesuits had built up an excellent system in and around Quebec; and the Sulpicians, whose order was formed one year before Ville Marie was founded by Maisonneuve, appear to have made adequate provision for primary and secondary education in this settlement. For fully sixty years after the conquest, many unsuccessful efforts were made by the conquerors to secularize education in Canada. According to several of the French-Canadian writers these efforts were not only unsuccessful, but proved disastrous to the educational system of the colony.

The entire school system by the end of the first quarter of the nineteenth century had completely collapsed, Mr. Logan said, because of the conflict of educational ideas of the two peoples, which, it was now being recognized, were quite incompatible. In the end each was left to work out its own salvation schoolastically. The Quebec public school system therefore, was denominational. There were Roman Catholic Schools and Protestant Schools examined under a department of education having a non-political head —the superintendent, not the minister of education—whose two advisers were secretaries, respectively, of the Protestant and Roman Catholic committees of a Council of Education, both enjoying the status of deputy ministers. The English secretary was also the director of Protestant education, he pointed out.

MENNONITES ARE STRANDED

Refused Permission to Enter Mexico, Now at El Paso, Texas

Regue, Sask., Nov. 5— Refused entrance to Mexico by the government of that republic, several families of Mennonites who left Hague district recently in quest of freedom and solitude, are now stranded, destitute and friendless, at El Paso, Tex.

Story of their troubles and their peculiar demands upon the Mexican government has been brought back by Mennonite families who accompanied the pilgrams to the Mexican border with the intention of "spying out" the lay of the land before they sold their possessions in Saskatchewan.

Several reasons have been given for the undesirability of more Mennonites as settlers in Mexico, the chief being that too great an influx of them would reflect on present labor standards.

In their demands on the Mexican colonization department the Mennonites, far from asking for tracts of land convenient to a rail road, have chosen a practically arid strip of desert country, seeking a guarantee that no railroad shall pass within 100 miles of their settlement for, at least, 100 years.

What will become of those who staked everything in the search for a freer and more isolated life than they enjoyed in Saskatchewan, is not known.

MILLION BUS. TO PASS THRU

Grain Stored in Midland Will Be Moved To Seaboard

An official dispatch was received by Superintendent George A. Stokes of the local C.N.R. office yesterday afternoon that 1,000,000 bushels of wheat were to be moved from the grain elevators at Midland, Ont. to the Atlantic seaboard. The grain will all be transported, via C. N.R. over the Belleville District, No. 7, to Montreal and other eastern ports for shipment across the Atlantic. Russia's recent failure to supply the wheat demand of Europe has no doubt had some bearing upon the movement of the Canadian wheat eastward.

The grain will be moved at the rate of from 50 to 100 cars per day and it will take from two weeks to transport all of the wheat eastward. It is also thought that additional crews will be needed to operate the trains that will be necessary to transport the grain through this district. This will mean, that some of the railroad employees who have recently been idle, will return to their posts as additional freight trains will be necessary to carry the wheat.

Local railroad officials feel very optimistic about the future conditions of the road for the coming winter. Apples, cattle, cucumbers, etc., are beginning to move over the railroad and it is thought, that coupled with the new "ship by rail" campaign recently inaugurated, that conditions on the railroads look better than they have in quite some time.

WOUNDED MAN, THEN BURIED HIM ALIVE FINED 100 DOLLARS

Benton, Ill., Nov. 5—The penalty for hitting a man on the head with an axe and burying him as dead is a $100 fine if the victim survives and digs his way out of the grave, the Circuit Court established Wednesday.

Dan Hoffman, soft drink proprietor, pleaded guilty to attacking Raymond Hackett with an axe during a quarrel and was assessed the $100 fine. The grave from which Hackett escaped had been dug hastily in a field.

Hoffman was indicted on a charge of assault with intent to murder, but no witnesses could be found to the attack and midnight burial.

OPERATION OF DUMPING DUTY IS EXPLAINED

Dept. of National Revenue Has Issued Bulletin to all Appraisers

3 ELEMENTS ENTER

Illustration Given as to How Dumping Duty Works

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 5.—(By The Canadian Press)—Explaining the operation of the dumping duty applied to commodities imported from countries, whose rate of exchange is adverse to Canada and whose commodities are subject to valuations fixed for duty purposes by Department of National Revenue today issued a bulletin to all appraisers, a concrete illustration of how the regulation works out is given.

Three elements enter into the operation, (A) the selling price in the country of origin, (B) The valuation imposed in Canada for duty purposes, and (C) the rate of exchange adverse to Canadian money.

Assuming the selling price in the country of origin be $100, the fixed value in Canada to be $150, and the adverse rate of exchange 10 per cent, both the selling price and the fixed value are increased 10 per cent so that the former become $110 and the latter $165. The difference between the two, that is to say, $55—represents the amount of special or dumping duty which customs collectors are to exact.

Some difficulty had arisen as to whether the 10 per cent exchange should be applied only to the selling price in the country of origin; but today's bulletin makes it clear that it is to be applied not only to that also to the valuation fixed for duty purposes by the Ministers.

Guardian Comments on Statements

Manchester, England.—(By The Canadian Press)—The Manchester Guardian editorial comment on a statement of Rev. W. Charter Piterjy, President of the Congregational Union, at the recent conference assembly of the Union in this city: "Our spiritual leaders tend to be lowminded or rather flagrant optimists. We are going to the dogs, or things were never so satisfactory as now, churches never so full, heaven never so heartily sung, sermons never so carefully followed."

The Guardian says: "Mr. Piggott managed to avoid being too lugubrious or too robustly satisfied. He managed to consider the post-war generation without rallies against them and without claiming them as sanctified disciples. Many things have fallen to pieces of recent years but the general wreckage has made possible the emergence of one virtue at least. It is not easy to deceive oneself in face of such obvious proof of the inadequacy of existing standards; it is not easy to look complacently on a world whose chief need is accountability in fearful evidence. If amongst much disillusionment and much flight there exists, as Mr. Piggott seemed to think, an element of purpose, a determination to avoid at least self-deception, and to despair utterly to look to live on vain hopes, then the breakdown of our machinery will have served to spread this solitary virtue."

FRENCH ASK LEAVE TO BRING WINE

PARIS, Nov. 5.—The French athlete's wine is so important an item of his training diet that the Government will be asked, when Parliament meets next week, to seek permission for the Olympic team going to Los Angeles, U. S., to take their wine with them.

Deputy Noblemaire served notice that he would ask the Premier to intercede with the United States Government, so that the skaters and skiers might have the "necessary rations" ingredient of their training regime."

Embarrassing Moments

O. S. D. ACTIVITIES

Hon. G. S. Henry's Visit

On Thanksgiving Day our school was favored with a visit from Hon. G. S. Henry, Minister of Ontario and Minister of Education. He came for the special purpose of looking over our plant, and seeing for himself the conditions and requirements that exist. He discussed fully with Superintendent Peterjy the various improvements that he asked for, promised his most sympathetic consideration, and said he would take immediate steps to get detailed plans and estimates. On his return to Toronto, Mr. Henry directed Dr. Colquhoun, the Deputy Minister of Education, and Mr. Crookery, the Assistant-Deputy to come to the School, thoroughly investigate our requirements and make such recommendations as they considered were necessary.

They arrived here on the 22nd, and spent the forenoon in looking over our plant and discussing the matter fully with Mr. Peterjy, and were apparently convinced of the imperative need of the improvement asked for.

Of these, two are urgently required. In view of the very inadequate accommodation in the residence due to the increased attendance, Mr. Peterjy is asking that a separate building be erected for the use of all pupils up to eleven years of age, to be completely equipped with dormitories, classrooms, dining room and kitchen. The other urgent requirement is an up-to-date vocational building, to replace the present antiquated, delapidated structures, with their inconvenient accommodation and equipment.

Mr. Peterjy is greatly pleased and encouraged by the interest in these matters always manifested by the Minister and His Deputies, and feels confident that one, probably both of these buildings will be under way this fall, and at least the latter unit completed before the end of the present session.

He told police the man staggered out in front of the heavy truck and ran into the right side of the machine.

Low Price of Potatoes Blamed on Truckers

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 5 (CP) — Truckers were blamed for the low prices Ontario farmers are receiving for their potatoes at a meeting of Toronto wholesale potato and produce dealers here yesterday. It was decided to appoint a committee to confer with Commissioner Frost, the city vincial governments, and the city council to see that the civic bylaw regarding licensing of trucks carrying produce and potatoes into the city was enforced. Truckers escaped the commercial license, neither wholesalers nor retailers could survive the competition, it was said.

DON'T GO WITH OLD METHODS

Message Given by English Minister to S. S. Workers

Manchester, England.—(By The Canadian Press)—Members of a class out on a hike on Sunday morning, clean-limbed and clear-eyed, were not bad; they did not look bad, they were fine specimens of young people, said Rev. F. Paton-Williams, rector St. Ann's church, Manchester, in speaking to members of Sunday School workers recently and appealing to them to modernize their lessons. It was not one little bit of use going to these people with the old methods. They left them cold. Religion had far too long been left on the public parks a place full of notices saying "Do not do this" and "Do not do that" until this generation had turned round and said "What the devil was he on?" The depression and pious stiffness of some religious teaching alienated young life and made it wild. It was no use saying "What was good enough for father and my grandfather is good enough for them." It was not good enough for them, and ought not to be if the people in the Sunday schools generation had advanced at all.

Migration of Crows a "Reverse Instinct"

Edmonton, Alberta.—(By The Canadian Press)—If Edmonton citizens should sight crows flying south over the city late in November they need not be alarmed, Dominion examiner according to The Edmonton Journal, because in all probability the nonconformist has lost the sense of the 400 crows which Dr. Rowan, of the zoology department of the University of Alberta, has been experimenting with, in an effort to discover, just why birds should fly north for south at certain times of the year.

Dealing at some length with Dr. Rowan's experiments, the Journal says: "It seems that internal secretions are the secret of the 'migration' which makes the feathered flightsters head south in fall and north in spring. And further, according to the zoologist's experiments, the internal secretions are controlled by the light. So the doctor had the idea to get the "instinct" into reverse, by use of artificial lighting in his crow experimental station by the high level bridge, where he has been busily tracking old-Mother Nature.

"Approximately 400 crows," reports the professor, "are being kept in an aviary near the high level bridge shrouded by day in artificial light, a longer period of daylight is given, the combination of long hours of daylight instead of the normal alternating days has a direct effect on the internal secretion of the crows, and it is believed that this in turn affects the migratory instinct.

"Two years the crows were kept under similar conditions and then released in the autumn about October ten. Most of them went up North into the Lesser Slave Lake area, where one was shot as late as February 15, after experiencing temperature of 60 below zero without any apparent ill effects.

"This year the crows are being released at Medicine Hat and as they usually head in a northeast southeast direction, Edmonton will be in a direct line of flight and people will be able to get a chance to shoot them as they head northwards and more definite data can be obtained than if they were released from Edmonton."

LEGION HOLDING POPPY DAY NOV. 7

The Belleville Branch of the Canadian Legion has completed its plans for the annual observance of the Poppy Day Campaign, which is undertaken throughout Canada to provide Legion funds with which to take care of special cases of distress among war veterans. The needs of the Legion for such funds are greater than ever this year and the local branch is therefore making arrangements for an intensive Poppy Day on Saturday, November 7th.

Poppy Day was founded in England by the late Earl Haig, who saw in it a method of helping disabled veterans who make the poppies in the Velcraft Shops, and of raising funds to take care of distressed veterans. In Canada, the poppies and wreaths offered to the public by the Legion are wholly manufactured in the Velcraft Shops operated for handicapped veterans by the Department of Pensions and National Health. The Canadian products, and these veterans are able, by this means, to earn a livelihood. In addition, the proceeds of the Poppy Day Campaign will be used entirely by the Belleville Branch of the Legion for relief purposes locally and as the needs of this kind are expected to be great this winter, the officers of the Branch are looking for loyal support from the citizens of the community in their effort to raise money for this laudable purpose.

Broom Industry Hit in Transvaal Towns

Johannesburg, South Africa—(By The Canadian Press)—The small but promising broom industry of the Transvaal is threatened as the result of foreign competition, chiefly from Italy.

The broom industry has provided work for Coloureds and Natives, as well as a market for the broom corn of the Province.

There are three broom factories in the district of North and Rustenburg. These are now faced with the problem of meeting the competition of Italian-made brooms landed at Durban at prices varying from £2.25 to £2.50 a dozen, as compared with £3.75 to £4.50 for the South-African-made articles.

According to manufacturers, the competition is already so keen that factory costs have been cut to a minimum and further reduction in prices must be at the expense of the grower of broom corn. The matter was brought to Union by the local industry. One fur Transvaal manufacturer, it is stated, must eventually close down for lack of the Transvaal raw material.

AN AUSTRALIAN BUNYIP

A "bunyip," a monster 50 feet long, with caterpillar legs, a long red tongue and a cry like a bedlam of motor horns, was recently discovered in Australia by Harold Powell. Inside he found a large number of fish who were evidently "down under."

LEFT RESIDUE TO OUTSIDER

Mrs. Hisey Insistent That Elliott Should Share in Estate

Mrs. King stated Elliott told her husband while driving to Midland, along the road of the fourth to get and tell a constable "everything is all right."

Her husband did so and while he was out of the car Elliott said: "You know these police, they don't know how to write their own names."

Asig A. Ingram, Midland barrister, said Mrs. Hisey brought written instructions to his office on Jan. 13, 1931 to draw up a will. The will was drawn up the following day in the presence of himself and his stenographer.

The will was drawn in accordance with instructions handed to me on a piece of paper," he said. "Mrs. Hisey took the will away after execution. "We discovered Mrs. Hisey had already deeded the farm to her son and had taken back the mortgage."

Although he had advised her not to leave the residue of her estate to an outsider, Ingram said Mrs. Hisey was insistent. When he discovered this he wrote Mrs. Hisey said: "If you won't do it, I'll go to someone who will." Neither Elliott nor Gazin were present at any time during the preparation and drawing up of the will, he said.

William Bales, son-in-law of Mrs. Hisey, testified today, said a search of the house in Midland and the woman's effects failed to reveal the will drawn up by Ingram.

E. A. Little, Surrogate Court Registrar produced the original will of David M. Finnie, Honorary Dominion Treasurer of the Sky Scouts Association, and active in many other public service organizations of this capital. Mr. Finnie began his business career as an office boy and rose to the position of general manager of the Bank of Ottawa and one of the city's prominent financial figures.

J. ROBINSON GIVEN 2 YEARS LESS ONE DAY

Pleaded Guilty to Fraud in Motor Car Deal With Local Dealer

HAS RECORD

Ross Fretts, Charged With Manslaughter, Remanded 1 Week

Jonathan Robinson, alias John Matthews, was sentenced to two years less one day determined in the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph on Saturday by Magistrate Ponton, when he appeared on a charge of obtaining goods by false pretences over a motor car by means of a worthless cheque. This man had a record as long as the authorities in Ottawa, he being given a suspended sentence in Woodstock in 1921 on a charge of forgery. He appeared in court before sentence was pronounced.

Robinson was apprehended by the Toronto police about one year ago on a small charge, while at the same time a warrant had been issued from Ottawa for his arrest on the charge for which he was sentenced. Chief Reid realized the Toronto papers noticing this name and immediately got in touch with Toronto authorities with the result the man was turned over to the Belleville police.

Some weeks ago, Robinson came to Belleville and made a deal for a motor car with J. T. Warren of this city and tendered in part payment a cheque on the Market Br. Branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce Ottawa, for $182.50, the price of the car being $485.00. The cheque was sent to Ottawa for collection and returned Mr. Warren marked "No account." The charge followed.

Remanded for Week

Ross Fretts charged with manslaughter arising out of the death of Harry D. Littler, on Oct. 30th, appeared for preliminary hearing but was remanded for another week, the bail bond being reduced. The inquest into this death has not been completed and the Crown Attorney, B. C. Donnan was out of the city. James Watson, who helped to bring the unfortunate man here from Fretts' car into another car after the accident was charged with a breach of the L.C.A. but this case was also remanded for another week.

"Rackets," the 1931 slang word signifying the exploitation of worthy causes for causes not so worthy, and other means of raising money without working for it, were censured by the general committee in relation to unauthorized persons soliciting money and goods in the name of direct relief. In other cities various rackets have developed under the head of raising money for civic relief, which fact was an unpleasant taste. In brief, these exploitations generally result in the money being taken out of town by strangers while some part of a dollar remains in the house to house workers for money or clothing or food, should be reported at once and all such activities have been authorized nor will be. Any donations which may be made later will be authorized by resolution of the entire committee and over the signature of the Mayor.

Twenty telephone calls were received at relief headquarters Friday asking that vehicles be sent for clothing for men, women and children.

Men mobilized for work in the labor battalions on the Trans-Canada highway are being outfitted and those from overcoats, suits and underclothing have been donated.

Postoffice employees met and decided to donate one day's pay to the central relief fund.

Some fine specimens of young British manhood have been passing through the city in motor vehicles under the orders of every community they enter. It has been suggested that these young men would gladly work on farms for the winter for their board and lodging. An attempt to place some of them will be made.

TWO IN FIELD IN SOUTH WELLINGTON

Guelph, Ont., Nov. 7—Nothing in the nature of a surprise is expected in South Wellington election this afternoon for the South Wellington by-election, the result confidently expected that W. P. Gamble, Conservative candidate, will be the only two named to contest the seat made vacant by the death of the late Hon Lincoln Goldie.

ASKS RELIEF, BUYS LIQUOR

Londoners Told No Fine But Prison in Each Case

London, Ont., Nov. 7 (CP) —Londoners who seek relief but are found to be spending money on liquor are to be punished severely, Magistrate T. G. Saunders has decreed, to give point to the declaration, he sentenced John Wilson on Friday to six months in the Ontario Reformatory.

After Walters had been arrested on a vagrancy charge investigation showed that under the name of Walton he had been receiving relief from the city. Last year the liquor permit showed that meanwhile he had spent $8 for spirits in one month.

All such future offenders will be sent to jail without option of a fine, the Magistrate announced.

NEGOTIATIONS OPENED FOR RECIPROCITY

Democratic Member Believes Time Ripe For Trade Relations

OPEN LETTER

Appeal is Made as a Private Citizen to Premier Bennett

WASHINGTON, D.S., Nov. 7.—(By the Canadian Press)—Emmanuel Celler, Democratic member of the United States Congress of Brooklyn, N.Y., today made public a letter addressed to Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada in which he said as a citizen rather than as a member of the House of representatives he desired to acquaint Mr. Bennett with "the growing sentiment in the United States for an approachement between this country and Canada to the end there may be re-adopted what is generally known as reciprocity."

"I should be continued, "trade relations between the United States and Canada have reached a critical stage. We face two alternatives; either higher tariffs and less trade or lower tariffs by reciprocity or otherwise and more trade." Mr. Celler also appeals to the Premier to bring budget here directly aimed against United States goods. Senator Bennett Government had taken action against many United States goods, he added. "These increased Canadian duties are going to have further repercussions in the United States and may well give rise to further retaliation on our side of the border."

He concluded "You have been elected upon a platform pledging you to a policy of tariff for revenue the tariff barriers between our countries are not. President Taft so ably stated, 'Is not a violation of the protective principle'."

RESPONSE NOT AS GENEROUS

Poppy Day Collections Not as Spontaneous as Formerly

The poppy day committee of the Canadian Legion report that the response of the general public to-day was not as large or as spontaneous or generous as in former years. The reason is unknown. However the collectors will be out to-night, and it is hoped that the afternoon and evening crowds will give more liberally than they have done at least, the attainment of last year.

Make Jobless Men Prospect

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 7 (CP)—Ottawa should send unemployed men into Northern Ontario there prospecting for mines, profits from which would be used to lower the city's tax rate, J. Loren McGowan, local lawyer, prospector, proposed in an address to a service club yesterday. Years ago a similar idea was successfully worked out in Cobalt, Ont., he said, and there were towns in Germany and elsewhere which operated money-making schemes to keep down their tax rates.

WHAT'S A DINT IF PAID FOR?

Sight of Dollar Bill Puts New Complexion on Bump

If Diogenes had been present on the occasion of the Front Street accident early last evening he could have added, put out his lantern and gone home to bed, satisfied.

A small touring car whose driver apparently did not know just where to go, swerved erratically and came to a dead stop right on that intersection. A large sedan closely following, moved over to the curb and with a screech of dry rubber on asphalt, came to a standstill, only with its bumper resting snugly in a hollow it had made for itself in the rear end of the car ahead.

The air tensed, doors were thrown open and a pair of large black shoes and grey trouser fabric emerged, but only visible sign was the tail of the machine sticking up above the puny wilderness of tails of the marsh land. The owner of the shoes and trousers buried in the soft earth. The effort to clamber out of the place of interment were able to make their way from the machine to open air, and between a quarter and half mile from the Provincial Highway and from there a call was sent in for aid. A number of highway trucks were working in the vicinity at the time and those in charge assisted in the rescue work. All of the employees on the highway told the reporter that the man had simply crawled out into the marsh. He did not actually see the crash being over a hill from the marsh. He stated that one of the officers had stated "the poor man have hit something."

The machine is not seriously damaged and this afternoon will be removed from its present location to the garage where it will be in training base to the airport for repairs. Provincial Police officers were flying over Belleville all morning and several motorists interviewed were witnessed and Pilot Officer Thornber was one of the number. At the time of the accident he was alone performing some advanced manoeuvres over the city. Spectators are more than pleased that the accident was not as serious as at first supposed.

LINDBERGH TO TAKE HIS LESSON

New York, Nov. 7.—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, one world's air hero, is going to take a flying lesson. The object is to pass his "examinations" as pilot of the American Clipper, largest transport plane ever built into regular operation on air line.

MAN AND WIFE BURN IN FIRE

Trapped in Small Dwelling After Explosion —both die

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Nov. 7—Trapped in their small dwelling half a mile south of here, Mr. and Mrs. Wright, 30, and his wife, Betty, aged 24, lost their lives in a fire which destroyed their home yesterday. Their charred bodies were taken from the ruins of their home shortly after the fire was first seen.

Residents of the district state they heard an explosion, soon after which the house was enveloped in a 10 by 16-foot shack occupied by the Algars. An attempt was made to break in the door but owing to the arrival of the fire brigade, but the flames drove the would-be rescuers back.

Built to house 150 guests, a hotel at Kirkland Lake, Northern Ontario, is becoming quite a popular holiday resort, has not a single bath-tub. The cure itself has no public water supply.

PLANE FALLS IN MARSHLAND ACROSS BAY

Pilot Thornber, of Trenton Training Base, Slightly Injured

IN SOFT OOZE

Instructor in Plane With Thornber is Not Injured

Pilot Officer Thornber of the Air Training Base at Trenton, while performing advanced flying manoeuvres with a Fleet Aircraft machine shortly before noon today crashed in Murphy's Marsh, Prince Edward County, four miles south of Belleville but fortunately escaped serious injury. A passenger in the plane, Instructor Pilot Officer Elliott was not injured. Both men were rushed to the Belleville General Hospital in the field ambulance of the airsquadron and attended by the medical officer of the squadron. It was learned that Officer Thornber was cut badly about the face and mouth apparently being thrown in front of the machine, when it buried itself in the soft earth of the marsh. Flying Officer Elliott, who had been in the plane with the instructor pilot at the time of the crash was not known nor would it be known until an enquiry had taken place.

Sticking in Mire

The reporter of the Ontario Intelligencer went to the scene of the crash and the only visible sign was the tail of the machine sticking up above the puny wilderness of tails of the marsh land. The nose to a depth of the wings was buried in the soft earth. The officer in charge of the plane, and the instructor were able to make their way from the machine to open air, between a quarter and half mile from the Provincial Highway and from there a call was sent in for aid. A number of highway trucks were working in the vicinity at the time and those in charge assisted in the rescue work. BRITISH VIEW OPTIMISTIC ON WORLD STATE

Revival Seen in Constantly Falling Idleness in Britain

MONEY CONDITION

Long View Quite Cheery Say Executives

(By George Hambleton; Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Nov. 7—The wheels of industry are moving forward. Higher wages penny have brought new hope to Canada and United States. British unemployment continues to fall. A number of weeks firms have begun overtime in the West Riding of Yorkshire. In six weeks nine British woolen trade centres have reported a wage increased roll by 38,000. The South Wales coal industry is reacting beneficially to the new trade impetus.

The Indian Government has announced a large cut in a British Motor Vehicle Firm. A declaration of 10 per cent dividend has been made by one British automobile firm. Another has raised its dividend from 10 to 20 per cent and a third has announced that during 1931 its sales showed increased 277 per cent.

Over young Londoner in a bottle for business was one of the strong cut races known. By swift train and special airplane he sped 2,000? miles to Zuidhaven, Northern Africa, in 27 hours. He beat all competitors. He beat the record by 2 hours, a large slice of the British motor car bodies.

The outlook for British industry," says the monthly review of Barclay's bank, have regarded more hopefully than for some time past." For is old-fashioned barter prevails. For instance, the United States have traded wheat for Brazil-in dukes, so the English and Scottish fishing interests are now offering 100,000 barrels of cured herring to the Soviet Government in exchange for Russian lumber.

First Snowfall Records for Past Eleven Years

From time to time reports reach this office in which instances are cited and comments made upon what seems to be an unusually late flowering of many plants, shrubs and berry bushes. The inquiring reporter delves into the records and finds that on November 23rd, 1921, Mr. E. T. Austin, manager of the Bank of Montreal in this city, and the present city engineer, Mr. Charles Mott, saw in bloom pickets of Marigolds which were flowering on the corner of Victoria avenue and Hillcrest. Also he found in the records kept in Mr. Austin's books the following: The first snowfall of the last eleven years. The earliest fall was on November 2nd, 1922, and the latest on December 4th, 1928. The following is a record of the last eleven years:

CAMPAIGN IS WORKING WELL

Relief Grouping Plan is Given Splendid Reception

The various committees engaged on the Belleville Unemployment Relief Fund have been working strenuously and headway towards the accomplishment of the praise-worthy object which they have undertaken is being made.

Mr. G. A. C. Weir, manager of the Bank of Montreal, who is devoting much time to the work as chairman of the finance committee, said in a representative of the Ontario Intelligencer Saturday morning: "Satisfactory progress has been made along our various groups. City employees, before the plan was organized, gave up a day's pay for a period of six months and to date the Red Cross Movement has donated $250.00 from their Benevolent Fund. The business groups such as retail merchants, manufacturers, banks, lawyers and doctors are well organized and the committee is receiving a splendid response from them. Men are being asked to pledge subscriptions on a monthly basis over a period of five months. The committee feels that the objective will be reached within a period of three months.

A special appeal is being made to citizens who do not come within the respective groups and although the campaign is not properly launched a number of generous donations have been turned in. The fact that every dollar subscribed by the citizens in Belleville is supplemented by a similar amount from the Federal and Provincial governments, appeals to the subscribers.

KNOT-HOLE CLUB IS REORGANIZED

Reorganizing the Knot-Hole Club that functioned during the baseball season, it is expected that at least 300 boys between the ages of 10 and 15 will meet at the Y.M. C.A. tonight. It is the intention of the Y's Men's Club, who sponsored the club this summer, to keep the boys together under this organize as a boys' club or association. Whether or not any organization will be made for them to witness the hockey matches this coming winter, has not been decided as yet.

Y.M.C.A. AS HOSTS TO FIRST DRAFT

Throwing its doors open to the men who have been drafted to work on the Northern Ontario highway the local Y.M.C.A. are to be hosts to thirty of these men this afternoon. The men are to receive shower baths, have the privilege of the swimming pool and receive a general clean-up previous to their leaving tomorrow evening for their new work.

LIONS' CLUB OF BOYS IS FORMED

Neal presided and the election of officers resulted in the following executive being appointed: Chief, Clifford Bennett; sub-chief, Howard Pinkerton; Cache, Francis Tooker; Tally, Freeland Fitzgerald. The purpose of the club is for the development of the boys physically, mentally, spiritually and socially.

MEMBERS FETED BY POWER BOARD

Holding their weekly banquet and meeting the directors and workers of the Y.M.C.A. chess department met in the auditorium of the Y.M. C.A. last evening. The banquet was provided by the Women's Auxiliary of the Association. During the supper the team captains reported to the officers in charge and excellent interest was displayed by all team captains. The work to date is very satisfactory and the final meeting to finish all unsettled business will be held on November 20.

DUCK IS SHOT FAR FROM HOME

Mrs. Ella received the evening's special prize which consisted of ten pounds of sugar.

Ladies' first—Mrs. Behan, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Healip; gentlemen first Mr. Schoreder, Mr. Pinder, Mr. Bennett.

Miss Derrah again interpreted the music for the dancers who took possession after the completion of cards.

OPERETTA TO BE PRODUCED BY O.S.D.

The people of Belleville who were privileged to see the beautiful entertainment given a year ago by the pupils of the Ontario School for the Deaf, which was so much appreciated and highly extolled, will be glad to learn that the school is preparing an operetta to be presented in the auditorium of the Belleville Collegiate Institute on December 4th. The play, entitled "Hans Makes the Princess Laugh", will be given entirely by the pupils, with musical interludes, and all the costumes and the dances in costume which these children so beautifully perform. The purpose of the entertainment is two-fold. To give the people of Belleville a more adequate conception of the work done by the school in restoring these children to normalcy and to demonstrate their ability to take part in public functions at least as effectively as hearing children do, and, secondly to raise a fund to provide clothing and other necessities for a considerable number of deaf children throughout the province whose parents because of business misfortune or unemployment, are unable to do so.

TRAVELLING DENTIST CAR

Advantages of Free Life of a Dentist Are Related

Driving a large van in which was contained a complete dental laboratory, besides beds, a stove, a refrigerator and even a bird cage and canary, that had accompanied him for almost all of the nine years he had been on the road fixing aching teeth for those who were not able to be near dentists' offices Dr. Caldwell, D.D.S. stopped off in the city long enough last night to say "howdy" to the many friends who still remember him here.

The equipment contained in this travelling van is quite complete, and many ingenious devices—most of which were invented by the owner —add greatly to his comfort while on the way. One novel feature was a large round bumper in front of the car, which on closer inspection proved to be a tank filled with gasoline, under pressure, and used to supply the heat for the kitchen stove and "fire place".

Dr. Caldwell, who is a large boned man, and helped his father, Dr. J. Caldwell, maintains his extensive practice on Front street, some time ago, claims that the lure of the open road calls too strongly for him ever to consider settling down in any one spot for any length of time, and that although he did still have an office in Saskatchewan, where he maintains a home, when he is there, left in charge of an assistant, "We," he said, patting his travelling companion, the large bride bull dog, on the head, "find life too interesting to be cooped up in an office, looking out of the window. "Next month this time we'll be down in Florida. Work three months, and play the rest, that's our motto." And Dr. Caldwell waggled his stump tail vigorously in assent.

Bro. Frank Wessel is Presented With Traveling Bag

The regular meeting of Belleville Chapter No. 21 last night was turned into a reception to the Grand Sentinel, Bro. Frank Wessel, who is a Past Patron of this chapter. At the conclusion of the regular business Bro. Wessel was the recipient of a beautiful travelling case as an expression of the personal esteem in which he is held by the chapter and also their pride in his attainment of Grand Chapter office the presentation address being made by the Worthy Patron, Bro. R. D. Adams. His address was followed by expressions of appreciation by Bro Wessel from many members who were present.

He was next presented with a silver casserve by Sister Elizabeth Reid on behalf of the Worthy Matron, Sister Taylor and her husband, Bro. Naylor. He was also presented with a gent's fitted toilet case by the Worthy Matron on the half of Sister Chrysler, these gifts being an expression of appreciation and close friendship enjoyed by them.

Bro. Wessel replied very appropriately, expressing his appreciation of the kindness shown him and also gave an address which was in keeping with the high principles of the order.

A very dainty lunch was then served and dancing was the order of the evening, dancing being provided by Sister Hibbard. Many favors and noise-makers were distributed and for a while it seemed as though a real jazz orchestra was going to be arranged but their nerve apparently failed at the last moment. However, everyone present was enjoyed by not only the chapter's own members but also by the many visitors from Picton, Napanee, Bowmanville and as a matter of fact from practically every chapter in the district and everyone went home by one o'clock happy and not so very tired.

CITY TO HAVE FLYING CLUB

Carl Read Engaged in Formation of Local Organization

Aviation fans of the city who are seriously interested in furthering their ambitions to the point where they may personally learn to pilot their own planes in the mini mum of time and at the least expense, will perhaps soon be able to do so.

A flying club headed by Mr. Carl Read of this city is now being formed by him, providing he can secure enough intelligent members to keep the club out of the first plane and the necessary expenses connected with it. Speaking to about this today, Mr. Read is reported that the cost would be nominal if he could secure about twenty members. A pilot from the factory will be sent to the city to teach the students.

The plane itself is an "Aeroco," flowered with a German designed five cylinder motor, and is of flivver type, monoplane design. It will be equipped with landing pontoons or wheels, whichever is necessary, and some vacant boat house along South Front street will be the probable location of the hangar.

CARING FOR MEN

While the householder who has a job which brings him in enough to keep him warm and to feed his family site to warmth in his cozy home, some poor men there are who have taken to the broad highways or the railway lines and keep moving in their effort to get enough to live. The stern winter is at the door and it is pleasing to know that Belleville will not see wandering homeless men struggling through the drifts hungry and cold seeking shelter. Provision is to be made for them in the Memorial Hall basement—no better purpose could the hall serve at this time of need.

While these men are being housed and the entire organization of the city is going forward with its work to look after the residents of the city who are temporarily out of work and up against actual conditions, and when the full measure of justice is done these men of both classes then the citizens can rest with the full consciousness that they have done their duty by the way-worn and weary traveller and the citizen who is fighting a desperate battle to keep his own head and those of his family above the waters of adversity.

The task is large—it will not be easy to fill both of these demands—it will require the united efforts of all to perform this obligation as it should be performed. The job has been well started—it must be continued with extraordinary zeal and wholesouled endeavor.

ELECTRICITY, THE HIRED-GIRL

Kansas State farm wives have a new name for the electric bills when they come due. They call them the "hired-girl" bills. Electricity energy is beginning to play a very important part of the life on the farms of Canada and of the United States, more than people of the cities think of. Farming has so many angles of labor and into these electricity comes in with its heavy burden which has fallen on the women of the household. No wonder the Kansas women folk speak of the "hired-girl bill" instead of the "light bill" as it is called in the cities and towns of the United States and Canada.

Speaking of a survey which was recently made by Mrs. Rachel Ann Neiswender of the Kansas Farmer, the New York Times says:

"She expected that homes and barns would be wired for lighting, but that some machinery, milk-coolers and cream separators, would be run electrically. But the number of labor-saving devices she found surprised her. All the women she talked with were enthusiastic about getting their housework done as quickly and efficiently as possible. They had a list, except from their children, and felt themselves co-earners with their husbands. Budgets, systematic saving, definite programs for the work, with certain specified tasks for the children, are taken as a matter of course in their conversation about the apartments. Men used to say that women did not want and could not easily learn to use the inventions which make housekeeping comparatively simple. These modern Kansas farm women talk like efficiency engineers.

"If some of the families visited by Mrs. Neiswender are typical in size, the wife and mother needs all the intelligence and knack for management she can muster. Arriving in the middle of the afternoon, the visitor found the mother and her eldest daughter doing the family washing. Two electric motors were going full speed in a sunny kitchen where eighteen shirts, the total for the week, had just been neatly piled from the tub among the suds. There are eleven members in that family, and with the help of "the electric hired-girl" all is done and a Kansas farm mother and her children. Cooking is done on the electric range; and in silo-filling time, when twenty-two mouths are to be fed, the kitchen is comfortably cool. This family uses an electric refrigerator, a sewing machine, a washing machine and other appliances. Water for the house, barns and workshop is pumped by electricity. All the women interviewed remembered with a shudder the good old days of kerosene lamps, wood stoves and wash-boards. They now budget their household finances to include monthly payments on a new piece of equipment, for when the 'light bill' is larger, their work is easier."

No greater revolution has come in any of the various phases of life in the modern world than in that on the farm, with its scarcity and the lack of the devices through which it passes, the good roads and the motorcar.

Here is a revolution, the like of which could not be foretold by the wisest man of the past.

Many a man, not of Gandhi's type, would have delighted to have attracted the attention this man has won on his visit to England for the Indian Round Table Conference. What seems strange to the notoriety seeker is that Gandhi does not seek fame of this kind, while he who chases it, often does not find it.

THE LITTLE BLACK HEN

Said the little red rooster, "Gosh all hemlocks, things are tough;
Seems that worms are getting scarcer and scarcer,
I cannot find enough.
What's become of all those fat ones is a mystery to me;
There were thousands through that rainy spell; but now where can they be?"

The old black hen who heard him, didn't grumble or complain,
She had gone through lots of dry spells, she had lived through floods of rain;
So she flew upon the grindstone, and she gave her claws a whet,
And she said, "I've never seen the time there weren't worms to get."

She picked a new and undug spot; the earth was hard and firm.
The little rooster jeered, "New ground, there's no place for a worm."
The old black hen just spread her feet, and dug both fast and free,
"I must go to the worms," she said, "The worms won't come to me."

The rooster vainly spent his day, through habit, by the ways,
Where fat round worms had passed in squads back in the rainy days;
When nightfall found him speechless, he was tired in accord,
"I'm hungry as a fowl can be; conditions sure are tough."

He turned then to the old black hen and said, "It's worse with you,
For your not only hungry but you must be tired, too.
I reated while I watched for worms, so I feel fairly fit,
But how are you? Without worms, too?
And after all that work."

The old black hen hopped to her perch and dropped her eyes to sleep.
And murmured in a drowsy tone,
"Young man, hear this, and weep:
I'm full of worms and happy for I've dined both long and well.
The worms are there, as always—but I
... I had to dig like h—l."

CHRISTMAS IS IN THE OFFING, though hardly fields with wings and dip appears in the mists of fall before the spirit of Christmas begins to manifest itself. The first symptoms of Christmas include the activities of those canny forebears and persons who begin to plan their Christmas gifts. Many mysterious manufactures of thread and lace begin by the fireside shortly after the chairs are taken in from the verandah and another summer passes into memory. By and by they will take shape and form as dainty gifts for friends on the gift list. Belleville merchants anticipate a big Christmas trade this year and some of them are already feeling the effect of the advance Christmas spirit. The early shopper is the choosing of gifts upon which a deposit is paid, to be laid away in the store until Christmas week, periodical payments being paid in the meantime and the whole paid off before Christmas. This is a practise that is commendable and this year merchants report that these sales are larger than ever before presaging a splendid Christmas trade.

FARMERS WILL FOREGATHER with Rotarians next Monday at the Hotel Quinte in the annual get-together function which has become an interesting institution. The speaker will be Hon J. H. Cooke, of Saskatchewan, a friend of Bob Cooke. As a farmer, himself, and as head of the greatest public utility organization in the world, the honorable minister of power will have a message of intimate interest for the sons of the soil assembled as well as the city chaps who form the Rotarian Club. He will likely speak on the possibilities and advantages of hydro-electric power as applied to farm activities, but whatever the Hon R. A. has to say will be of interest, as always.

Other Papers' Opinions

TREND UPWARD

While reports from all parts of the country indicate a revival of trade and point the way to better times it is well to remember that the road back up is a hard and the top will not be reached without an occasional setback.

World conditions are such that when the backbone of Canadian industry, is handed for a better place in the prior list, but there is always a danger that speculators will carry it upwards at too fast a pace. That the inevitable slump will come, with its accompanying discouragement.

But through it all we run the steady streak of returning confidence. There is every reason to believe that Russia is not only out of the export market but that its power to create distrust by its system of dumping is gone. And, with no wheat to sell, the Soviets are out of their other lines of activity. They need the money wheat brings in to carry on. That means, as one paper puts it, that "the bolsheviks are out of the five-year plan." It also means that the Soviet will increase which has overhung all markets has been removed. That in itself is a long step back towards prosperity.

With the British elections proving that neither Socialism nor Communism is spreading in the political world that Russian menace is removed from the industrial horizon the world is facing with more keenness as usual is the offing. And the nations are getting back to work with confidence which the leaders of today have a solution in the business of tomorrow.—Toronto Telegram.

LLOYD GEORGE

Lloyd George was "almost supreme arbiter of Britain's destiny" at a time because the nation, then in grave extremity, needed something of a dictator at the helm. He was dominating will adapted him to that role. His will and abilities were admittedly directed to good effect. But since that time Mr. Lloyd George has invariably have been misdirected; his consuming ambition has ever overcome itself, and his judgment in nearly all emergencies wrong. Consequently, his fall from power at the end of Lloyd George's ascendency over his party; his fall from the high position was a colossal blunder. He forgot England. He forgot England again when he failed to crush Germany, and commanded, united action on the part of the party leaders, and so he is today, as the news despatches describe him, "a voice in the wilderness," though the cables hasten to add that he is still influential conversations believe that he will remain there permanently. It hardly seems necessary to say his principles and strategy that he will be content to play political second fiddle in addition to a "brilliant future behind him." He is politically dead and buried as far as Britain is concerned.—Montreal Gazette.

LUXURIES VS. GOOD HARD LIVING

In his reply to the greeting of his fellow-townsfolk at the banquet on Tuesday, Premier MacDonald voiced the hope that the "luxuries" of today were being brought up in the same way that the "necessities" of yesterday, but good, hard living.

Whether the Premier was confined to Scotland or intended for the whole Empire is not quite clear, but the point is that the choosing is not able to the latter. It is to be feared that Mr. MacDonald was thinking of Canada when he spoke of the "luxuries" of today. When he was a boy, and it is impossible for the world to go back to the old conditions. While there is a good deal to be said for the spartan attitude of mind which the Premier represent is less and less inclined to adopt it, and the younger generation less inclined to endure any such attitude.

In some respects, this is to be regretted. The hardships the youth of a generation or two ago undoubtedly contribute in no small degree to the wonderful ability they had to fight battle of life with more confidence and to meet with more real success. Many things are made too easy for the youth of today, from childhood up to manhood. Premier MacDonald obviously had this in mind when he spoke of the luxuries. The youth who is helped to everything soon loses the ability and even the capacity, to help himself. While our industries have been applied to farm improvement in this respect, they do not, fortunately, in the main introduce to weaken our youth, but rather to inspire them with self-confidence. Many things are "luxuries" they can have—that, and the will to succeed.—Montreal Star.

Letters to the Editor

Belleville, Nov. 6, 1931.

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—Reading the local paper last night, and having read the papers during the day, I noticed that the Retail Merchants' Association of Belleville had decided "not to close" on Remembrance Day (Armistice Day), and this was the general feeling of the merchants throughout the province. Evidently this sentiment was emphasized by the representative of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, who addressed the meeting yesterday morning.

I note also that Mr. Hanna, as president of the Belleville Retail Merchants' Association, suggested that the two holidays, Thanksgiving and Armistice Days, be combined, as is done here years, and that this suggestion was so well received, that a motion was made and carried supporting his opinion. As I understand it, the present administration at Ottawa, wished Armistice Day to be, distinctly, a DAY OF REMEMBRANCE, to recall to the minds of those who had lived during the days of the Great War, the sacrifices endured during those years of turmoil, and reverently pay tribute to the memory of our country's manhood who suffered and died that British ideals of freedom should still live, and that the growing generations should not forget, in the turmoil with the sacrifices made for this idea and those ideals. Also that the day should not recall the stirring scenes of the first Armistice Day celebration, 1918, little when the greatest war the world had ever known was ended, and a tyrant, war-lieaded Germany, defeated and humiliated. This day was declared a public holiday, just the same as Christmas, Dominion Day or Labor Day, and it would appear that the merchants in their action are decrying a legal enactment.

I appreciate that time erodes the memory and that thankfulness may wane in the heart for, that day thirteen years ago, when the world peace was proclaimed. Is it not it eserve more necessary than ever, that we keep this day sacred and hold suitably observed

To those who served in the war, the action taken yesterday morning by the Associated Merchants is regretted, the more especially as the Belleville Boy Scouts assisted in the worked with, and been honored by the Presidency of their local association.

Thanking you Mr. Editor for the space in your valuable paper, to express these sentiments and comments, I am, (Signed).

IS BEAUTY ONLY SKIN-DEEP?

Editor, The Ontario Intelligencer:
Dear Sir,

I often wonder where "Beautiful Belleville" is. Nature, indeed, has certainly been lavish in bestowing beauty on it, but to be beautiful, it must be kept clean and be a helping hand given by mankind to accentuate it. The beauty of Belleville I think that numerous visitors who have noticed the natural beauty it may have had. Remembrance Day is the only outstanding thing that is, yet, our merchants who are raving about a "Beautiful Belleville" are doing their utmost in their business to destroy the beauty of their surroundings, and have proclaimed "shall be observed and honored throughout the province."

Merchants' Retail Association! you have forgotten to remember!

For two months, a huge sign has stood on Front Street at the Bridge, which is a positive eyesore to the ugly side of our citizens. Last week, the sign was taken down, but five people observed the "Two Sisters" on the Bay of Quinte and also a policeman, a collegiate school boy and myself. Others of Beautiful Belleville, I fear.

Another beautiful thing I have in mind, is the "Eye Sore" on Front. What are Front Street merchants doing about it? Is it the beauty of beauty in the vision of "The Eyesore" that you, when they pass the proposed site, there are the same conditions that exist there today, those premises at the rear on both sides of Front Street are worth while cleaning up.

"Well, Merchants" do your bit, "grin" a little, fill in your holes and quagmires, to provide employment, purchase proper garbage cans, and help improve business, and by doing this you can help to make Belleville a beautiful place to live in, and to be proud of, to point out.

Yours for a "Beautiful Belleville,"
"MONS STAR."

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,
"I think you are doing yeoman service" on our "Beautiful Belleville" by making so many sensible suggestions as to how people can help to provide work even though it be out of a monetary value.

Probably the following suggestion is worth while handing on. In my experience in constructive work I have found there has been a great deal of good done by a baker, a shoemaker, a barber, a garage, etc. If they are approached by clergymen they could help to co-operate with you, and tell you if their particular village could find enough work for a particular baker or for they could correspond with the local "labor bureau" (I hate the word) a great help to many. I think we should all be on the lookout for jobs, and avenues for creating odjobs. Self-respecting men desire first and foremost, "WORK" and only as the very last resource, the "dole".

Yours faithfully,
(Rev.) J. Cantrell.

P.S.—From several of your editorials recently you seem to think the churches should do more social work. Are they not doing it? But unfortunately, the churches are powerless to do anything "worth while", as they lack the resources.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—I hope the citizens of Belleville will ignore the action of the Retail Merchants' Association. It is unthinkable that a small group of business men should decide against the ruling of the Dominion government, which states that Remembrance Day is to have the same status as Christmas or New Year's Day. Mr. M. Barr of Islington, Ont., voices my feeling in this matter in this morning's edition of the Mail and Empire. In part he says he is amazed at the disregard of a ruling from the seat of government "with profound dismay for thousands of young people", and much more, closing with these words: "If you have any pride in your city, see to it that it is decided in the press of every other day by its citizens as a member of the Retail Merchants' association. I will make my position clear. I am a member of the Mercantile Association, but could not be present when the vote was taken. If it was reported to me, certainly not a representative voter to ignore the holiday provided for remembrance.

I hope Mayor Reid will take a firm stand against it's action.

I make no apology for this letter.

BUCK'S DENIAL OF VIOLENCE

Denies Doctrine of Armed Action Advocated in Canada

TORONTO, Nov. 7. — Admission that members of the Communist Party of Canada stood ready to follow the dictates of the Communist International at Moscow if it came to a choice between the ranks when Tim Buck, general secretary, was put on the stand in his own defence at the state trial of eight Communist leaders here yesterday.

Interrogating examination by defence counsel on the policies and constitution of the Canadian party, Mr. Justice Wright quoted from a pamphlet written by Buck, in which fit of new members: "From now on it is the duty of the party and of the Communist international, your highest command: "What was the question?" the Lordship asked.

"That's our position," Buck replied.

A minute later he modified this statement by asserting that devia-tion from the party program was possible to fit conditions prevailing in the various countries.

Tim Buck, the party's secretary of the Workers' Unit League was the first witness. The party had taught or advocated the use of violence, he said, overthrow of the existing government. They admitted, however, that its eventual overthrow was the aim of the party and that a "clash" was considered inevitable. Even, under cross-examination also admitted that arms would be used in such a clash, though he insisted that their use was not urged at the present.

Nobody regrets it more than I do, my deer, but unfortunately my duty comes before my own selfish pleasure, pop said.

Well of all the statements without facts to time, ma said, and pop said, Not at all, Ill explain. I red of a most unfortunate case in the paper this morning. It was about a chap named Lopez Gonzalez, or perhaps it was Gonzalez Lopez, anyway this poor fellow was driving from his own country for taking part in an insurrection, and he he is over here with his wife and 5 little Lopezes, or is it 6 Gonzalezes? Either way the principal is the same, and yesterday this poor sales or Lopez realized he dident have a cent left to his name, whatever it was, Lopez or Gonzales, and the only business he understands is is starting insurrections as his father and his grandfather did before him, so he decided that if he must starve at least he would starve striking at his trade like an honest man, so he pushed his way into the office of the first town of people he came to, crying, Down with whatever it is and up with whatever its not, herray for dictatorships. But alas the poor Lopez fi was the 2nd annual thanksgiving meeting of the 600 investors who stopped buying Havana cigars thus throwing vast numbers of Cuban cigar makers out of their jobs and giving rise to the conditions that breed insurrection, and drove him like Gonzales out of the country, and although I am not my self a man at least I can do my bit and I stopped buying Havana cigars even at a grate personel sacrifice.

Wich he kept on doing.

LITTLE JOURNEYS

To the Busy Hives of Industry Which Contribute to Belleville's Constant and Growing Prosperity

No. 2

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the second of a series of articles on Belleville Industrial plants which will be published on Saturday of each week to make the citizens of Belleville and the world generally familiar with the many and varied industries which contribute to the general prosperity of this city and district. The last article in this series will appear on Saturday, November 14th.

STEPHENS-ADAMSON

The construction of massive and intricate forms of machinery and mill equipment is more or less a mystery to the average person. The steps that are taken to produce the finished article whereby the raw material is cast, drilled, ground, rolled, welded and all the various steps and operations incident to build intricate machinery to specifications, are all immensely interesting.

This week a visit was paid to the Stephens-Adamson Manufacturing Company of this city. The plant here is a branch of the parent plant at Aurora, Illinois. There is also a plant at Los Angeles, and in connection there are over six hundred employes at Aurora and one hundred and fifty at Los Angeles, and over one hundred employed here.

The Company was founded by two men who gave their names to it and who are still active in the management of its affairs. It is a stock company but the shares are very closely held there being no quotations on any of the exchanges, and practically all the shares are held by company officials and employees.

The Company specializes in manufacturing conveying, elevating, screening and hoisting machinery, transmissions, coal and ash handling equipment, coal crushers as well as sand and gravel plant.

Mining Machinery

A large part of the mine equipment at Noranda, Lake Shore, International Nickel, Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company and many others was made and installed by this branch factory. It is interesting to note that the coal and ash equipment at the terminal of the Hudson Bay Railroad at Fort Churchill is a product of the Stephens-Adamson Company and also that the firm is figuring on a propposition in South Africa.

Unloading Boats

Two large boats, plying the Great Lakes, have been fitted with unloading machinery which effect a great saving in time and unloading. Seventy-two hundred tons of coal or ore can be unloaded in eight hours against several days by hand. As a boat in operation is worth five hundred dollars a day one can easily imagine the saving. Briefly it is done in this way—the hold of the boat is divided into two V-shaped hoppers running the full length of the vessel. At the bottom of the hoppers are steel pan conveyor belts. In operation these travel along, loaded with material towards the bow where the load is discharged into another conveyor which elevates the material to the deck where it is discharged into another conveyor attached to a revolving boom that swings over either side of the boat and so to the deck.

Staff Personnel

The Stephens-Adamson Company took over the foundry and plant of the late Col. Marsh and immediately installed the latest machinery for economical manufacturing. Mr. G. A. Freeman who served his training in the parent plant at Aurora, came here to take charge. Associated with him are Mr. A. E. Smith, chief engineer, and Mr. L. McIntosh, superintendent.

When an order is received, it is carefully designed and drawn to specifications by the engineer and his staff of assistants. Calculation is all done by trigonometry in order to co-ordinate the rotating parts such as the different sized geared wheels and cog wheels with other moving parts of the same machine. Splendid examples of careful calculation and machine shop co-operation are the modern newspaper presses and linotype machine, used for setting the type for the newspaper, with their multitude of gears and rotating parts. Of course this company does not make printing presses, but the example serves to illustrate the point.

From Blueprint to Completion

When the blueprint is okayed and when a casting is needed, it is given to the pattern making department. Here skilled craftsmen work out the design in wood and this is called the pattern. The pattern is then taken to the foundry where the part needed is to be cast of steel or iron. One-half of a mold box is filled with sand. This is very fine grained and obtained only at Albany, N.Y. The wood pattern is then placed in the box and the sand is firmly packed around it until it is all covered except the upper surface. A separating material is then spread thinly over the pattern and sand and the second half of the box is fitted into place and more sand is packed in until the box is filled. Before the sand is packed in at the last, core-shaped sprues are set in sand that holds the pattern and about one inch from it. Two of these go to each end of the pattern. These serve to form holes into which molten steel is poured and through which air escapes as it is displaced by the metal. The upper part of the box is carefully lifted off, the pattern eased out of place and channels are cut from the sprues to the pattern. The two halves of the mold box are now joined together and securely fastened. Metal is then poured into the chamber formed by the pattern, through the holes made by the sprues.

STEPHENS-ADAMSON PLANT

Moulder To Machinist

When the metal has cooled sufficiently to be handled the mold box is separated, the casting lifted out and the sand cleaned off. It is now forwarded to the machine shop for finishing. Here, by means of lathes, drills, stones and the various trimming machines, the casting is finally brought to the finished state where it must meet all the fine inspections for imperfections and measurements specified in the blueprint. Having passed all the tests the part is laid aside until the machine of which it is to form a part, is ready to be assembled.

When no casting is made, the blueprint is sent to the fabricating department where steel plates, bars, rods, etc., are either rolled, punched, cut and trimmed as required to meet the specifications.

Thus it is that an engine or boiler or any of the many hundred forms of machinery are built. Mr. Freeman gave the information that when the plant was first established here that only twenty-five per cent of the manufacturing was done here whereas at present ninety per cent of their output is completed in Canada which reflects great credit on the local management and the skill of the workmen.

Mr. Freeman said that the reason this city was chosen as a location was that a splendid plant all ready for operation was in readiness, that there was an excellent railway service, a good supply of skilled labour which was not affected by seasonal demands for help by other large plants as is so often seen in other cities and for the splendid co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce and the city council.

As Canada grows so will the Stephens-Adamson Company and it is to be trusted their expansion development is not in the not too distant future.

NO SALARY CUTS?

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 7.—Ontario civil servants are not likely to suffer salary cuts in 1932, according to a notice distributed to the service by J. Frontey West, chairman of the public relief service fund.

Duck Hunters Don't Change But Ducks Pull Fast One,

Safe in Coveys and Flocks in Moira River Near Cannifton

Ardent enthusiasts of the honorable and ancient order of duck hunters still pile out of beds to the insistent shrillings of innumerable decrepit old alarm clocks in the middle of the night, pull on their rubber boots, with eyes closed tight, grab at twelve gauges with one hand and a cup of coffee with the other, kick the door open and stumble blindly in the cold darkness to the general direction of the garage, get in the old car, stiff with eyes half shut, drive twenty-five miles or so to some marsh where they will engage some leaky, old punt, struggle for another mile or so with it through the weeds, and spend the rest of the day alternately—watching the murky day break—watching the clouds roll up and, watching it rain—bailing out the boat—watching a couple of gulls on the main channel of the river—and the boat-load—looking over the boat for the sandwiches which were completely forgotten—bailing out the boat again—watching the old mama mud hen go through her daily dozen, half a dozen times—counting every pocket for some odd cigarette butts that might have been overlooked in the first search—watching an old coot of a muskrat—watching a duck come sailing up with perfect impunity and sneer at the wooden decoys, and then sail off again with his tail in the air—bailing out the boat again—Mercy Reid wishes to see if it is any colder than the night which is falling—watching the boat again—watching a couple of black ducks go sailing by a half mile in the air and a mile off to the right, and cursing loud, long, and fervently all weeds, water lilies and boats connected therewith.

Meanwhile the ducks have "pulled" a fast one on the saturated hunters. They have come in coveys and flocks in the Moira river just a little north of the Cannifton Bridge, where they flap their wings and honk derisively between sentences and laugh at the boat. One is telling them about the men sitting on the bank of the Belleville-Ivan, damp and dripping and without every ammunition necessary to row back to land.

Dr. Morgan was present representing the municipal council of the city and he stated that every physician in town was ready to do anything to help relieve cases of unemployment relief. The Bell Telephone Company and the insurance men of the city also are behind the issue and will do their share towards the relief measure.

Suburban Problem.

The question was brought up regarding taking in the suburban population in the civic unemployment measure. Mayor Reid emphatically that there would be no relief passed out to outside persons, as each municipality must stand on their own feet in this undertaking. The Mayor stated he behind the civic relief project, was the Belleville relief for Belleville citizens.

Mr. E. V. Illsley, chairman of the supply committee of the civic relief fund, stated this morning that he was very grateful for the response that his committee had received in the line of supplies during the past few days. The committee has been an inspiration to the members of the committee. Mr. Illsley only wishes that the same co-operation will only receive the same co-operation on the part of the citizens.

Tear Gas is Demonstrated

District Inspector Lougheed of the Ontario Provincial Police, of Belleville, Chief Constable Kidd of the Belleville Police Department, were in Peterboro Friday attending a demonstration of the use of tear gas in police work. The gas is dispersed through a gas bill or baton, riot gun or grenade, and has been adopted as protection equipment by several police departments in Canada. In the United States this gas equipment is largely installed by police departments, banks, hotels and railroad offices. The use of this gas must necessarily be authorized by the provincial authorities.

J. B. BOYCE

To his hundreds of customers, Mr. Boyce clearly explains the factors which influenced him in taking the General Motors of Canada franchise.

"Like thousands of other Canadians," he says, "it has been our desire for a considerable time to merchandise a product produced in Canada, and believing that those with whom we have had business association for seven years were not seriously contemplating the manufacturing of a Canadian plant, we began investigating the numerous motor car franchises that had been presented for our consideration."

This investigation disclosed to Mr. Boyce that the sale for Canadian Chevrolet cars for the year to date is greater than the combined sales of all other low-priced cars; that Canadian has gained in public favor year after year until Pontiac Sales in Canada for 1930 were more than double the sale of any other medium priced six cylinder cars. Added to this was the fact that the manufacturing unit of Mc-Laughlin-Buick, Pontiac and Cadillac cannot obtain sufficient material and supplies in this country of million of dollars of duties contributing tremendously to the prosperity of the country, and that this demands for help by other large plants as is so often seen in other cities and for the splendid co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce and the city council.

As Canada grows so will the Stephens-Adamson Company and it is to be trusted their expansion development is not in the not too distant future.

Sixteen citizens on Friday were supplied through the Ontario Employment Bureau with men to do work whereby they intended doing themselves. This is not a large number but it shows that the give a man a job' campaign is causing some citizens to do what they can along this way. Every day the demand for help, both for men and women, to do odd jobs, should show an increase. There are many people who would be pleased to have reasonable charge and the giving of a job, large or small, is a great encouragement by deserving men and women, who usually work for a living. The needy man around the house is quite commendable on the part of those people who can well afford to pay others to do the work, when times are good and work is plentiful, but at the present time work is scarce and jobs few and when we can find not the cost, is urgently needed by the men and women out of employment. Major Lorne Green, manager of the employment bureau, asks that many of the citizens who phoned for help on Friday said that they could find work themselves in the near future in the light in which it is now being put up to the unemployed, is a splendid idea to 'fall in line' and do their best. The 'give a man a job' plan to do a good turn every day' is a motto which can well be adopted by all citizens.

Liberal Organization Committee to Convene

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 7 (CP)—A meeting of the National Liberal organization committee will be held in Ottawa on November 23, Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, has issued a call for the meeting, which it is expected, will be attended by approximately fifty-five prominent Liberals from every Province of Canada. As indicated in his recent speech at London, the Liberal leader regards organization as of very great importance to the Liberal party at present, and it is in pursuance of this feeling that he has summoned the committee.

The National Liberal organization committee was formed at the time of the convention of 1919 which chose Mr. King as leader of the Liberal party. A vice-president was chosen for each province of the Dominion, and approximately five Liberals from each province were appointed members of the committee. The committee was to have charge of the party's organization.

Meetings of the committee have been discontinued for several years, the Liberal leader in the interval decided that it is important for the committee to assemble at this time, at present and decide on what action should be taken. He has consequently asked the committee to reconvene.

A Washington teacher has devised a way to encourage children having wooden notes on bars resembling those on which they learn music while playing the game.

"A PAIR OF PANTS"

Friends:

A man is not a good deal like a pair of pants. I don't mean just because somebody now and then takes him to the dickens. That is a good thing for a pair of pants, and, sometimes for a man. It may save him from being a worse asp some other time.

What I mean by "like a pair of pants" is that a man starts out in life, or business, or love, or what have you, a good deal like a pair of pants does. Everything is fine and dandy. Then it is the buttons that shine, and the seat.

I don't know anything that looks prouder than a new pair of pants. They are all creased and pressed and perfumed, just as they came from the factory. They seem to realize the...beauty of the world, and of a man's part in it, especially.

We set out some morning with our new pants on our mind, which is no place for pants in the first place, for pants are not built naturally be our pants. It may be our dignity, or our swelled idea of ourself, or something like that.

Then we go walking in tactical daubs us with a dab of mud. We wipe it off, but its anxious to get a gob of grease. Before the day is done the traffic of life has taken the shine off the seat and out of us, and made us or some sad looking pants.

It is my own idea (although it is far from being my own idea) that a pair of pants isn't fit for much until it isn't fit for much of anything. Then they are the old enough to fish in, and friends that are old enough to be in trouble are the ones worth while.

Women will never understand it, but there is nothing quite as near to a man's heart as a good old pair of pants, strange as it may seem. They have been tried and not found wanting, and there is the secret with Dobb's Plumbing Shop.

Our customers are our old friends. They have stood by us, because we have stood by them.

Our pastimes follow the same policy, standing by the...school of cold weather keeping winter's icy breath well outside your door. We handle all furnaces as well as hot water and hot air heating systems, so stand against winter by having us install one in your home immediately.

OUTLAWS OF EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

They rode back into the corral and watched Larry Foriorn fall out. As his tail cleared the gate post she snagged him; his face she lit running, flanked the call expertly and led him, grinning, come down aloid rolled the little animal over twice, "minding wrangler with that tie," he announced. "By crikey, you're strong."

"Give the lady ten thousand dollars," Rube Tenney ordered. "Fourteen flat. . . . You've earned a long way for a lickin', mister."

Nate Tichenor, at the foot of his saddle for a desk, wrote out the check. "Thanks, the girl and especially, and waved the check to dry the ink. "Say come, say go. I have no qualms at sicking you, Nate. I'm compelled with the best men in the country at the Pendleton Round-up last year and took second money. I'm sure you'll see that show with eleven hundred dollars more in the September payroll."

"You're a man's woman," he told her feelingly. "I've never had more fun losing ten thousand dollars."

"And I've never had more fun winning it. You're a true blue sport, Nate, and a true blue sport never knows a regret." And she laughed and tore up the check.

He had no reply to make to this, half surprised and half grateful, he set his horse, looking down at her with a queer, intense light in his eyes, seeing which Rube Tenney gathered his men together and rode off with them toward headquarters. When they were out of hook range of the ranch house he said, hearing Nate Tichenor spoke:

"Larry Kershaw, I've never loved a woman before, but I love you."

INSTALMENT XIV

Tichenor knew the ghost of old Rance Kershaw was coming between him and his desire.

"I understand, Larry," he said, finally. "Well, I'm good at waiting but I certainly do crave the job of taking care of you."

She smiled up at him. "Well, I have reached the end of my rope," she sighed, slyly. "What does a valet know about taking care of a man?"

He diamounted, squatted on his heels in the shade of the corral and sat and motioned her to sit beside him.

"I'm not concerned with how much money you have," she suggested presently. "I'm not interested in that."

"Larry, I'm the proprietor of a big dream, a half-owner in a bond and brokerage house in New York I've made enough money to retire on now. But I'm too young to rust out, so I'm going to get every one big deal before I quit, Larry, in the Dominion Valley Power Company."

She glood up, gazing down at him reproachfully. "Do you think San ta Claus that gave me twice what my land was worth, were paid? Nations was cold. "That was your nice little method of controlling property, was it?"

"Well, it was a good price, Larry, but the land was worth that to me. Had anybody told you you were a fool you would have haggled and made a couple of hundred thousand dollars. But it wouldn't be charity. I want to love with you when we closed that deal. That's happened since and I don't know why. I only know I'm glad it's happened, even if nothing should ever come of it. . . . Sit down, please. You can't pick a fight with me merely because I declined to take advantage of your ignorance of the value of what you held, plus your acute financial embarrassment."

She sat down.

"You and I are not popular in our little world," he went on. "I don't know how you feel about it, but that knowledge has always hurt me. My heart is back where my people lie buried. I've wanted to do something big and constructive, accumulate a pile of money and do it nicely it wisely—in this country. I—I want neighbors. I want to be thought well of." He waved his hand toward the east. "I don't belong in that country and I don't like it. I want to live here and you might as well know it now."

"Go on. I'm listening, Nate."

"You're going to marry me, sooner or later, and I want to know if you'll insist on my position in here six months of the year?"

"A little bit shorter than I care to consider, but I can stand it."

"Larry, you're a darling. . . . Well I've found a way to popularize both clans. When the Mountain Valley Power Company's dam is in, I'm going to sell water there to Foriorn Valley. They're irrigating from deep wells over there, and the water is receding fast."

"Those people are a miserable lot, Nate. I was blackballed out of the Women's Club in Valley Centre."

"So was my mother."

"I've never been invited up to any of a picnic, parties or a barbecue, even by the people who come up here to hunt and fish and front on our ranch. I want no credit from those people, Nate."

A break in her voice caused him to glance sharply at her. Tears were rolling silently down her cheeks.

He gazed moodily down Eden Valley and watched the last rays of the sun gliding the crowns of the scattered pines. Yes, the people of Foriorn Valley had always been free to use Eden Valley for a playground.

"They can't come to Eden Valley any more, he decided aloud. "I'll put a sign up on the gate that leads from the county to the Bar H." The mountaineer was speaking now. "I wouldn't have truck with your enemies, Larry."

She leaned over and put her arm around his neck, drew his face down and kissed him. "I do love you, Nate. And we're sufficient unto ourselves aren't we?"

He held her so close to him she could hear his heart thumping with the fierce joy that possessed him. He was happy at last; the thought came to him that never again would he be lonely. Nevertheless, he had dreamed a big dream and he recoiled from the prospect of abandoning it.

"We needn't be friendly with them, darling," he resumed, "but we can sell them water. And it's not a lot of money out of them and save them a lot of money. And it's not altogether their fault that we've been estranged. I've got to admit we weren't wholesome crew."

"Well run them," she cried, pensionately, "and when they've been ruined we'll run cattle over their farms, Nate."

She was still recalcitrant, for she had been wounded deeply, and women do not forget their wounds as readily as men do. "I'm not interested, Nate, I am not my brother's keeper."

"I rather thought you might urge me to be nice to them," he complained a little sadly. And he went on to sketch the situation as he had conceived it, the girl listening alertly and forbearing to interrupt him. At that conclusion of his statement she said:

"Very well, Nate. I'll get religion and love mine enemies; they've been mine for one check, but for your sake I'll turn the other. But I'll not forgive Silas Babson. Nate he killed my father just as surely as if he'd actually killed a Kershaw or any Kershaw ever killed a Hemsley. You said a moment ago you wouldn't have truck with my enemies, Well, that Babson is my enemy. Are you going to have truck with him?"

"I do not see how I can very well avoid that, Larry. Foriorn Valley will have to form an irrigation district to get the water and you know Babson's their bellwether. He'll run the show."

"He mustn't run it with you. You will run that show. I'll not have you playing second middle to a man that isn't fit to shine your boots. That's final."

"Well, how are you going to prevent it scrubby?"

"If you do I'll not marry you."

"Threatening me, eh? Don't you realize none of my clan has ever been driven?"

She dodged that terse thrust. "I'll compromise with you. He nice to the Foriorn Valleyites, if you wish, but smash Babson. I want him smashed," she added with quiet vehemence.

"But if I humor you little wildcat I'll have to smash the Bank of Valley Centre and when I've been smashed all the depositors will be smashed with it."

"You don't truly love me" she chid him petulantly.

"I can give up my love. I've lived twenty-nine years without it and I can live some more."

Again she put her arms around him and looked up, face down to hers. "Why we're feuding again, sweetheart. I'll accumulate a million for you your own way. I'd rather have you than the scalp of Silas Babson"—and she sealed that pronouncement with half a dozen kisses.

"You win, Larry. You can lead a mule to water but you can't make him drink. I'll smash Babson for you. And I have an ancient grudge against that rat Henry Rook by too, so I'll put him out of the best salaried position in Valley Centre."

"What's wrong with Henry Rook by?"

"Once when I was about sixteen years old I walked around the block in Valley Centre to avoid coming face to face with your brother Owen. Rooky saw me do it so he followed me and twitted me about it. Implied I was afraid of Owen. Then he went back and talked with Owen and I saw the pair of them smiling at my discomfiture. So I didn't avoid the meeting after that. Rooky would have liked to see a killing I imagine, just to vary the routine of his dull life. So I bent my gun over his right shoulder—right between the shoulder and the neck — and knocked him flat on his back. . . . And I said to Rooky, 'Rooky, if you move a finger, say so and I'll kill you. I'm not looking for trouble.'

"And what did Owen say?"

"He was ready for me, but he didn't pull. And when Rooky picked himself up Owen said, 'That's right, Henry. This is the closest season in Eden Valley'—and he gave Henry Rooky the great-grandfather of all the kicks under the coat-tail and walked away from me."

"Poor Owen."

"So I'll make a wholesale job of cleaning out the whole lot, from my Bank of Valley Centre, if I can. And after I've smashed the bank I'll buy the wreck, saving the depositors and have myself elected president."

"You've got to promise something also before I'll marry you, Nate. Help me with the branding —you're a big hand and I can use you—but as soon as the branding's finished go away and complete your business and come back to me as soon as you can."

"I promise." But let me give you a small warning. Don't ever come me with too many demands or promises."

"The only promise I'll ever exact from you again, Nate Tichenor, will be love, honor, and obey, and me until death do us part."

And, dazed now with all my worldly goods—including the Eden Valley water supply—at your sweetheart! I'll race you back to the house to see who wins."

"You'd win. That means you're riding can step."

"Make it a kiss then."

"Well, you'd still win, so I might as well pay the bet here and now." And she did.

INSTALMENT XV

Joe Brainerd, editor of the Valley Centre Register, had been summoned to the Bank of Valley Centre, Babson led him into his private office, and then, for the last time, he disclosed his plan for the organization of the Dominion Valley Irrigation District.

"Here's the copy for a full-page ad," he finished. "It's a call for mass meeting of the citizens, to be held next Saturday afternoon in the plaza, for the purpose of discussing the water situation and the appointment of a committee to investigate the possibilities of leading surface irrigation into the valley. I'll plant the idea good and strong in their minds at that mass meeting, but in the meantime you get out a good rousing editorial that will give them something to think about. Warn 'em that this Mountain-Valley Power Company is about to grab the water for power purposes. Tell 'em Nate Tichenor's the Mountain Valley Power Company. Give Tichenor hell in a quiet way, but be firm. If we tackle Tichenor now the chances are we can cuchre his company out of a contract to sell water to Foriorn Valley. Get the idea? He told me his company wouldn't consider selling us water and why. If we threaten his source of water supply chances are he'll change his mind and do business with us. And that's what's wrong with him."

SHORT WAVE STATION BUILT

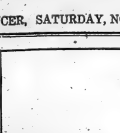
British Broadcasting Co. Erect One For Colonies at Daventry

LONDON, Eng., Nov. 7 (CP)—Without further delay, the British Broadcasting Corporation will begin plans for the erection of a short wave broadcasting station at Daventry, to which the whole Empire may listen, it was announced yesterday.

Plans for the station were discussed at the last Imperial Conference, but difficulties of financing the project on a permanent basis postponed the development. Now, however, word from an Imperial point of view couples with a strong desire expressed throughout the Empire, especially from the crown colonies, determination of the corporation to proceed without further delay.

Lived Four Years in Windowless Closet

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—A thirteen-year-old girl was taken by police yesterday from a windowless closet in which she had said she had lived for four years.



Her father and stepmother, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Illey, were arrested. The girl, Edith, was removed to a hospital.

Police Lieutenan Ruby O. Brandt said she found the girl crouched behind the closet's locked door. For a while after being taken from the darkened room she could not see. Police said she was unschooled, could answer only "yes" and "no", and that her appearance was that of a defective.

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 16. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.) By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Through narrow, winding alleyways Tarzan went. Then up a rickety stairs. Behind a lighted window he saw two men talking. One was the suspected French officer, in the act of handing the other some papers. Then he left the room. Silently Tarzan opened the door as the second fellow turned his face. It was Rokoff, the Russian!

The villain's face paled as he saw Tarzan. With a shriek he sprang up. The ape-man leaped upon him, iron fingers choking him into insensibility. The papers proved to be the missing state documents! With them Tarzan hastened to Algiers, en route to Cape Town, learning meanwhile that Rokoff's accomplice ,the traitor had shot himself.

As Tarzan walked up the ship's gangway, two men could have been observed watching him closely. He settled himself for the long voyage, congratulating himself that he had seen the last of Rokoff. Every night he spent hours on deck watching the endless sea. And always his every movement was being secretly observed.

Tonight the last straggler had left the deck. From the shadows two men crept. Quite close now, they crouched behind Tarzan. Suddenly they leaped for their victim. Before Tarzan of the Apes, lightning though he was, could save himself, he was pitched over the rail and was falling into the deep Atlantic.

Twelve Axioms in Share Buying

After a long experience with traders in the customers' room, Frank E. Cahn, member of the New York Stock Exchange, outlines twelve axioms to follow:

1. Merchandise your securities; stocks are made to buy and sell.

2. Don't worry about dividends that you are right and the market is wrong. The market will agree right.

3. Let your profits run and curtail your losses; you can't make money taking small profits and big losses.

4. Price cometh before a fall: many big moves are sustained through price of opinion; because you have expressed an opinion about the market, don't permit your pride from altering it.

5. The advantage of having a mind is the ability to change it.

6. Be just as firm in the direction of the market tendency; it not only take profits but increase your lots to suit; a few stocks which obvious lack sponsorship against market, or those that decline in an advancing market.

7. Avoid personally conducted tours; they are originated and run by those who are high and dry with impossible securities at ridiculous prices; if anything is pressed, you have your finger in the crack of the door, while the other fellow holds the door.

8. Don't take a life interest. If you are wrong on stock, dispose of it.

9. Deal in stocks that have a broad market. The worst losses are sustained in inactive issues, under pockets, through disappearance of the buy and sell orders from desk or design.

10. Never regret a profit; you can neither sell at the top nor buy at the bottom.

11. Be cautious; let the other fellow make a little.

12. You can't be right all the time. If you never made a mistake you would be the only person who did.

These axioms, let it be noted, have been evolved by a firm that specializes in stock market tips, rather than conservative investment or long pull holding of good issues. Even so, good ideas for thinking over can be found in these axioms. Mr. Cahn would no doubt be one of the first to agree. One of the best rules in one thing; the actual carrying them out with a few weeks in the stock market is and incidentally the only place where real profits come in.

STABILIZING SILVER PRICE

Minister of Mines Predicts Benefit From Orient

Toronto, Nov. 7.—Canada's returning prosperity will set another big silver wave within 60 to 90 days when stabilization of world silver prices will throw open the vast Oriental market with more than $500,000 in prospective purchasers, Hon. Charles McCrea, Minister of Mines, predicted last night in an address to the Toronto Prospectors and Miners' Association at the Royal Ontario Museum.

Ontario as a province also would directly benefit, Mr. McCrea prophesied, with better silver prices making it profitable to reopen and operate mines which have been abandoned because they could not make money at prevailing silver levels.

He said he based his forecast on the recent recommendation of the Empire currency commission in England, which had emphasized the need for attention to the silver situation, and upon what he considered the prime facie logic of any step to rehabilitate the purchasing power of nearly a billion Oriental people, hoarded, treasured, and needed badly, as customers.

Some sort of a premium at gold production or assistance in the development of claims had been considered by the Ontario Government, Mr. McCrea said, but the proposal had been abandoned. This suggestion was advanced by people who felt that stimulation of gold production was one remedy for the present discount on Canadian currency in New York, and who had observed how this very discount itself was serving to speed up gold output.

Mrs. (Dr.) Stratton, Kapanee, spent Friday with Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Stratton, George street.

The names of Mr. and Mrs. William Haslett of Toronto, should have been included in the list of those who composed the party of mourners in attendance at the funeral of the late Mrs. John Haslett, which took place from St. Thomas Church to the Bellevile cemetery on Friday. Mr. Haslett is a son of the late Mrs. Haslett.

A very pleasant event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Reynolds, Foxboro, on Monday evening, when Miss Helen Davis was honored as a party given by fellow-members of her Sunday School class. Miss Davis, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Davis had been invited to attend at the Reynolds' home after which her Sunday School class would be entertained in number, with their teacher, Mrs. Everett Sills, came to bid her farewell as she was leaving to spend the winter with her brother, Mr. Jack Davis, in Bermuda. Miss Davis, who was taken entirely by surprise by the chums, was presented with a handsome leather purse. An enjoyable evening was spent at the conclusion of which lunch was served. NO PROSECUTIONS IN THIS PROVINCE

Toronto, Nov. 7.—"Surely there must be some mistake about that despatch," said Attorney-General William Price, last night when informed that the Vancouver police chief had declared that all moneychangers would be prosecuted who kept open on Armistice Day.

"I don't see how they can be stopped from opening their places of business if they want to," said Mr. Price, "At any rate there will be no such prosecutions in Ontario."

The Attorney-General, however, expressed the hope that all Ontario would keep Armistice Day, as it was intended it should be kept, when declared a solemn holiday.

"This is our great day of remembrance," said he "A day for remembering those who died, not knowing how the day had come, and paying to them, as sincerely and faithfully as we know how, a tribute their sacrifice so richly merits."

FARMER ROUNDS UP IN CHICKEN-COOP RAID

GARNIA, Nov. 7.—How a farmer rounded up three men about to steal his chickens and marched them off to the police, headed up with a .22 rifle, was related in county police court when preliminary terms varying from three to six months were imposed on Russell Bean, John McDonald and Oliver Churchill all of Wallaceburg, who were charged with theft of poultry from Lyle Wicks, Dawn Township.

QUEEN'S KIN WEDS COMMONER

Lady May Cambridge, daughter of Princess Alice, Countess of Athlone and niece of Queen Mary, and Henry Abel Smith, of the Royal Horse Guards, as they emerged from the tiny Sixteenth Century church at Coleshill after they were married. The brilliant wedding was one of the high spots of the autumn Mayfair social season. The former Lady May was reported betrothed to the Prince of Wales at one time.

BRIDGE ST. W.M.S.

The monthly meeting of the Bridge Street W.M.S. held on Friday, November 6th, was well attended. Mrs. Bishop presided and opened the service with the use of the hymn, "Jesus the Very Thought of Thee" and followed with a prayer for guidance and blessing on the work. The minutes of the October meeting were read by the Secretary, Mrs Holton and adopted. Mrs. Schryver gave the financial report and reminded the women that the close of the year is near at hand and suggested that all arrears be met as soon as possible.

Mrs. Bishop explained the purpose of the Autumn Thankoffering. It is devoted to the retirement fund of devoted missionaries. —

Mrs. Parnsworth reported on temperance work, supplemented by Mrs. Bishop who gave some figures that were startling and bespoke the cooperation of all W.M.S. women in an effort to lessen the sale of alcoholic beverages during the present economic depression.

Mrs. Younge offered a prayer of dedication for the "Thankoffering", Mrs. Holmes and her group were in charge of the program with Mrs. Holmes presiding. Mrs. Richardson gave the Scripture lesson from the third chapter of Nehemiah and followed it with a choice reading illustrating the pioneer university of Christ. Mrs. Holmes gave variety to her program by asking three of the delegates who attended the great Missionary Congress held in Toronto in October to give their impressions of the gathering.

Mrs. Holmes spoke of the great crowd that came from long distances to attend a missionary meeting of the rapt attention given to the speakers; of the inspiration that such an assembly of Christians gave one. She said that one's faith was strengthened in the assurance that Christianity was not dead or dying.

Mrs. Farnsworth attended the overflow meeting in the Metropolitan Church. The size and eagerness of the crowd impressed her, too. She referred to the beauty of Church as a fitting shrine for God to meet with His followers. While other speakers were interesting and instructive, Dr. Kagawa was the person around whom one's chief interest centred. She spoke of the wonderful "Kingdom of God Movement" inaugurated by Dr. Kagawa in Japan, the influence of which, she believed, we were feeling in Canada.

Following these two speakers, Mrs. Baker emphasized some of the statements of Mrs. Mims. Deroche and Mrs. Farnsworth, and went on to describe the impression made by Mrs. Schryver gave the financial report and reminded the women that the close of the year is near at hand and suggested that all arrears be met as soon as possible.

Poet's Corner

I must say good-bye to the leaves.
They are turning and turning,
In drops of flame and of gold
Dripping down to the ground;
In flutter of green and brown
Down on the streets of the town
They are falling and falling
Silently, slowly down.

(Tis a sad, sad fate, ah me.
Having been as a bird in the tree,
Having lifted and lifted in air,
Rocked and swayed up there,
Now to drop down in the rain
To flatten and fade. Is it pain
To fall sleepily, slowly down
On the streets of the town?)

I must say good-bye to the leaves
They are burning, burning,
Dancing and prancing,
Whirling and skirling.....
For a while they linger on trees,
And the gold, the green and the flame
Seem to think it a merry game
To be gone without question,
Retort or suggestion,
(Leaving the air and the light
To Earth) they drop out of sight
On the murk and the dirt of the town
Swiftly swirling down .....
I must say good-bye to the leaves.

If You Must Diet Do It Wisely

The rage for rapid loss of weight is responsible for more unwise food practices than any other dietary subscription. It is possible for any one of a number of drastic measures to bring a good deal of fat in a very short time. And it is easy to be carried away by a wave of enthusiasm, if there is not an anchor of sufficient substance to keep us steady.

Violent exercises repeated constantly, meals, and gulps without sleep will quickly take off the pounds and inches. But the influence which, she believed, we were feeling in Canada.

Following these two speakers, Mrs. Baker emphasized some of the statements of Mrs. Mims. Deroche and Mrs. Farnsworth, and went on to describe the impression made by this noted Christian gentleman when seen informally in a family group.

To him Christ is a great vital personality, from whom we may draw great physical, mental and spiritual power. He takes the "Sermon on the Mount" as the pattern for all Christians, and the possibility of its accomplishments he has put to the test in the slums of Kobe.

Mrs. Bishop closed with prayer, after which Mrs. Holmes and her group served a social cup of tea.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman
Notes of Thanks.

1. When sending a thank-you letter for wedding gifts, how should the letter be written, by that I mean, should the woman's name come first and the man's second, like this: "Dear Eva and Earl" or should the man's name come first and the woman's name second, "Dear Earl and Eva?" The gift was sent by Eva and Earl, but the check was signed by Earl.

2. In answering the gift by a thank-you card, how should the letter be signed? Should the letter be signed Harold and Helen, or Helen and Harold, and does it make any difference who writes it?

Reader.

1. In this note, write the woman's name first—Dear Eva and Earl. The fact that the check was signed by Earl does not affect this. Also it is, of course, from both of them.

2. The bride to be writes the thank-you notes for the wedding presents, or, if they are received after the wedding, the wife writes the notes. She signs them with her name only, but, in the body of the note, she naturally refers to her fiance as "my husband" as the case may be: appreciation of the thoughtfulness of the gift—"John and I are so happy with your dear thought of us," and so forth.

And you didn't mean that you were to send a thank-you card, did you? Don't send a thank-you-note card—a note of thanks is the thing to send.

Bridal Procession

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am to be married very shortly for the second time. Will you please advise me just how we should form in line when going to the altar, and on what side of the groom should I stand during the ceremony? I am having two bridesmaids and two best men.

G.

Are you going to have ushers? If so they go first in the processional, walking two by two. Then the two bridesmaids, walking together. Then you and your father or whoever is to present you in marriage. If one of your brides maids is the maid of honor, then she walks alone, before you and your father. The other bridesmaid would then walk alone, before the maid or matron of honor.

The two best men—it is unusual to have more than one—of course would accompany the groom as he waits for you at the top of the aisle.

During the ceremony, you stand on the left of the groom, so that when you and he turn to go down the aisle, you will be on his right.

Candles at Luncheon

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is a correct and good taste to burn candles at a luncheon?

2. When serving lunch, do you put the long spoon in the glass or beside the saucer?

Young, ambitious, intelligent, there is much you may do for the equally young engineer. It appeals to me, this thought of his, facing the world together, taking its ups and downs with philosophy, good humor and courage.

3. Then should it be left in the glass while drinking as you do at a soda fountain, or do you take it out of the glass and put it on the table?

G.

No, we should not put candles on our luncheon table unless we absolutely need them for light.

2. The spoon may be placed at the place when we are setting the table, with the other silver pieces, or, if we wish, we may place the spoon on the plate that should be placed under the glass.

3. Do not leave the spoon in the glass while you are drinking the punch. Place the spoon on the under plate.

In Midst of Plenty

By Beatrice Fairfax
An Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

"Shall I marry for money or for love?" Money is represented by an elderly if not aged man; love comes in a person of my brother's old school fellows who has lately returned from South America.—Me is an engagement out of a job, and not in the best of health.

The married man is not ardent as such. He says he won't make demands on his wife's time, will be enchanted with my companionship and he adds sternly, 'the general sense of decorum and the diminution of your youth and beauty will contribute to my life.' Just like a book.

My engineer says we are a wonderful team, matched in years and outlook—that business things can't go on as they are. The very thought of his unemployment and rise will follow this long depression. When I listen to him I can see all kinds of rosy things impressive high tides carry us glorious to wealth and power—and my husband lands on foreign shores—we are acclaimed!

"And then I have my reaction in favor of the man with money. His wealth is in hand. There is nothing more to be done in that direction. I have to do it by the word, and the tale is done, that ends well. I am ready for the part."

What do you advise, dear Miss Fairfax?

"Hortense".

I am surprised at such a question from a healthy, intelligent girl. But let's look at the facts. First of all I would suggest that you find a husband instead of a married to the "elderly if not aged man." What are you expecting from marriage?

If it is a guarantee of a full dinner pail you want, even that can't be assured you. The rich suitor's fortune may be lost overnight.

You are young, apparently vigorous, able to work, worth a good salary if you apply yourself. Why not quietly get ahead up for a job?

I offer this thought because you speak mainly of what this man will do for you. After all, what are you willing to mind to do for either of these men? The role of pretty parasite that the elderly man maps out for you may, and probably will, pall on both of you. Then what?

And whatever you do, be a good sport. Don't crab. I say this because you strike me as a girl who has had things easy if not soft.

And I may add here a word about a woman: I know whom I greatly admire. Her life was a "bed of roses." Nothing happened in her girlhood to make a perfectly charmed existence. She was pretty and sunny, clever. Her host of friends and brothers adored her.

Among her suitors was a man who would be chosen among a hundred. They married. Three children, followed in quick success —little children.

And then at one stroke, in an accident, she lost her mother, father and brothers within a month her husband without warning developed an illness that settled into helpless invalidism.

Today she is at the head of a successful business which she started and which grows despite the ler." 11, 888,288 copies, in 864 lan- guages, being distributed last year.

WHEN TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY!

Teething time brings its troubles! For so often tooth cut through in the tender gums is hot weather, when there is danger of digestive upsets anyway.
One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable, is see that waste matter is carried off promptly and regularly.
Use a mild laxative like Castoria. It is made specially for the delicate needs of babies and children. It acts so gently, you can give it to young infants to relieve colic or pains. Yet it is always effective—keeps older children well regulated.
Castoria is a harmless vegetable preparation; it contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics.
When your baby is fretful and feverish with teething or a stomach disturbance, give a teaspoonful of Castoria to make him comfortable and happy. Children like the taste of genuine Castoria—never object to taking it. Be sure you get it with the name, Chas. H. Fletcher, on the package.

RICH food . . . strong coffee . . . heavy smoking . . . Then the penalty for indulgence. Digestive distress!
People who are haunted by this form of suffering simply have not learned its one common cause.
Usually, it's the fault of too much acid!
Meats, fish, breads, pastry can easily cause over-acidity, and this destroys the alkaline balance: foods won't digest. They can't. Nothing ever tastes good. Hoover Prunes Request for Spending Money

Washington, Nov. 7.—President Hoover's official pruning shears have snipped $350,000,000 from the requests of government departments for next year's spending money. Reporting yesterday upon the efforts to bring federal expenditures to a point nearer federal receipts, the President asserted that 'every item has been cut' in every government department, and the budget is not yet done, he added. He left still pending the question of whether or not the government will propose a tax increase.

SHIP BY RAIL ASSOCIATION MEET PREMIER

Will Discuss Trucking Industry and Ask For Legislation

WANT TAX

Will Ask for Share of Gas Tax for Wear and Tear On Streets

Stratford, Ont., Nov. 7—A deputation from the Stratford Ship-By-Rail Association will join with similar deputations from all over the province to wait upon Premier George S. Henry on November 17 to urge legislation for the trucking industry which would put truck and rail transportation on a more competitive basis. The interview had originally been arranged for Monday next, but a change in dates has been made at the request of the Prime Minister.

In pointing out the loss of revenue to the railroads through the unfair competition of trucks, the rail men will urge the Premier's support for legislation, which would stipulate regular hours for truck workers; specify the number of hours which they must be off duty before again going on the road, and bring a share of the gasoline tax to the municipalities in return for the wear and tear of trucks over city pavements.

Young Man Escorted from City by Police

London, Ont., Nov. 7—Because he allegedly told wild yarns about "the bank I am going to hold up" Harold Smith, Windsor, was arrested here on a vagrancy charge.

After a week in jail on remand Smith was today released on condition he leave the city immediately. He promised to do so, and was given a police escort to the city limits. Embarrassing Moments

New industries in Canada since August 1930, totalled 111, and a favorable sign was that 13 of these were British.

Gold production in August 1930, mounted to 170,052 ounces in July 1931, 223,734 ounces, in August 1931, 235,620 ounces and in September 1931, 239,533 ounces — an individual increase to $55,000 per annum.

Canada's adverse trade balance with the United States for the first nine months of 1930 was $81,000,000 and for the first nine months of 1931 has decreased to $11,000,000. For the third quarter of 1931 (only $16,000,000. Last month for the first time in many years the balance was favorable to Canada.

Particularly notable is the fact that the business world were the Fire-stone Company resuming work at full capacity, the International Harvester Company recalling 300 employees a Quebec silk plant re-opening on full time a new silk company locating in Hamilton to take on 100 employees and a new firm to start the manufacture of electric refrigerators in Canada.

Conditions in the stock market were always significant for every advance of one cent per bushel meant $2,500,000 to Canada. The movement is becoming healthier at this times and Russia was oversold the market in Australia, Argentine and t'ne United States has been reaping by 15,000,000 acres more than the entire acreage expansion of those countries together with Canada since 1926. The acreage in the three countries was now standing at the 1921 level.

Optimism and Confidence in Canada's Future Urged by Minister of Commerce

Stressed Responsibility of Individual Citizen in Canada

SYSTEM OUTLINED

Best Work in Unemployment Done By Individual Effort.

BRANTFORD Ont. Nov. 7.—Optimism and confidence in the future of Canada were urged by Hon. H. H. Stevens Minister of Trade and Commerce in an address to the Board of Trade and three service clubs at a noon gathering Friday. Mr. Stevens briefly review ed recent developments in Canada's industry which gave reason for confidence that an upturn was now under way.

Stressing the responsibility resting upon the individual citizen of the democratic institutions of Canada were to be preserved, Mr. Stevens said:

"It is a very real problem. If we are not to swing in either one of two directions—on the one hand to dictatorship, such as we have in Italy, and in some measure, in Spain, in the other hand to the position of Soviet Russia. If we are to keep the middle course, every individual must discharge his duty as a citizen."

System Outlined

The structure of Canada's system was briefly outlined by Mr. Stevens from the individual through the municipal and provincial systems in the Dominion, and he pointed out the tendency of the business man and the public generally to allow responsibility to rest upon the state.

With a specific reference to unemployment he said that the best work in unemployment relief was achieved through individual effort. The Government must assist, and did assist, but the business man could accomplish more, relatively, in his own orbit of activity.

Mr. Stevens briefly cited the following facts to reasons for confidence; wholesales price, taking 1926 figures as 100 per cent. dropped as low as 72.3 in June of this year and 70.4 in October, a splendid opportunity of expansion being offered by these low prices.

17 YR. FIGHT ENDED TODAY

Justice Hodgins Dissolved Perpetual Injunction of Regulation 17

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 7—(By The Canadian Press.)—A fight lasting over seventeen years, involving the famous "regulation 17" was ended by Mr. Justice Hodgins at Osgoode Hall, yesterday, when he dissolved the "perpetual" injunction obtained by citizens of Ottawa against the Roman Catholic Separate School trustees for the city restraining them from employing "unqualified" teachers under the regulations of the department if education of Ontario and the borrowing of money by raising debentures.

Walter Guertin and Henry C. Smith appeared for the Board and told Mr. Justice Hodgins in his chambers, that the Board now did not have any unqualified teachers in their employ. They contended that the Board now was complying with all the requirements of the department.

W. N. Tilley, K.C., represented the Attorney General and pointed out that "regulation 17" was now abolished, and as the Board was complying with the restrictions in the teaching of French in the public schools and the department requirements, that the department consented to the lifting of the injunction.

Mr. Guertin said the Board urgently needed money which they proposed to raise through issuance of debentures.

The injunction was first obtained by R. Mackell and other from Chief Justice Falconbridge in 1914, continuing by Mr. Justice Hodgins and a "perpetual" injunction granted later by the late Mr. Justice Lennox.

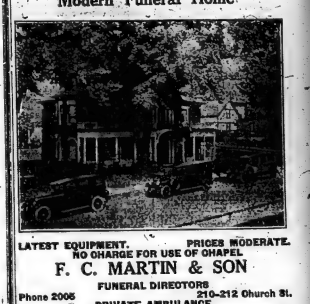
REDUCE FIXED ASSESSMENT



Ottawa Allowed Privileges to Encourage Building

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 7.—(By The Canadian Press.)—As an employment relief measure, Ottawa will be permitted to give a reduced fixed assessment to encourage building operations before the first of May. Assurance that the reduced assessment would be permitted has been given Controller George H. Dunbar by Hon. W. H. Price, Provincial Attorney-General. Mr. Dunbar confired with Mr. Price in Toronto this week.

It is suggested that a fixed assessment as low as 25 per cent. of the cost of the building should be allowed for three years on buildings erected between October and May 11.

All Star Card is Arranged

Wrestlers to Appear in Belleville Show All Signed

With the matching of two wrestling stars for the thirty-minute opening bout, the program for the All-star wrestling show to be held at the Arena Armt Tuesday evening has been completed. The men, who will appear in the first match are real stars, who have appeared in main bouts of more than one important show. Harry La Belle, Toronto Italian who was formerly rated as the outstanding amateur in Canada, is to trade grips with Tyrder Horn, the mystery wrestler who has appeared on the scene of recent months and, using that name, has broken some highly rated men.

La Belle is of the ferocious type and a few years ago killed a man in a Toronto bout. As a result he found wrestling at a time but came back to best some of the best of the amateurs and, after a period of tempting offers, turned professional. He has had more than his share of victories in the mental realm but in this Tyrder Horn he is meeting a dangerous opponent, who is likely to come back in top form. La Belle starts through house work. Every bout on the card promises to provide a lot of sensational action. Jack Kogut, Canadian light heavyweight champion is being groomed for the world's championship, which he has competed for on previous occasions and all but won. He cannot well afford a loss but he will have to pull out his best efforts to win the two hour main bout from Alex Kasabouski. Wrestling fans, who does credit to his former instructor, the late Stanislaus Zbyszko. The semi-final between Frankie Hart, handsome Dutch star, and Nick Bezeau, the battling Dane, promises to be in keeping with the rest of the program. They are men of outstanding ability and combine speed and science with Nelson being the rougher of the pair.

Watch break the B.C.I. football team have received word that they are to play their return game with Picton C.I. on Wednesday, November 11th. That is Remembrance Day and has been proclaimed a national holiday the same as Labour Day, or New Year's Day by the Federal Government. This should give the local football fans an opportunity to play in front of the citizens who never had a chance to see the kids in action this year.

Coach Shiels got his senior squad through a stiff drill last evening in preparation for today's game in Peterboro and seemed quite satisfied with the showing that the players made. However, will be back at quarter with Reynolds, Graves and the fleet-footed Dick Philp will form the back field. Jimmie Fitzwell, the junior's kicking half, will be there ready to relieve in case of necessity. The line of scrimmage are all in fine condition and they expect to give the Peter a real battle. Who the officials for the game here next Wednesday afternoon will be have not been decided upon as yet.

Harry Ashbourne is working his new fighting overtime in order that they will be in shape for the battle with Jack Dempsey on Armistice Day. He went his best record yet when Lang's opponent will be but Robinson from somewhere in the west. He is matched against a real top-notcher the local kid will "bring home the bacon."

Bill Rankin and "Bouncer" Hulsey, referees in the Monday night's "rassling" bouts in Toronto and returned home during the praises of the bouts, they were especially interested in the showing of Jack Kogut who is to wrestle on the card here on Tuesday evening. Both local fans feel assured that Jack will get a great kick out of seeing Kogut in action. Referee Hulsey speaks as told them that Kasaboski will be the toughest opponent worth alone, as he was a pupil of the late Stanley Zbyszko and the "Polish Lion" taught his countryman many neat tricks.

In the opening bout on Tuesday evening Larry La Belle, the Toronto Italian, will grapple with Tyrder Horn, the masked mystery. LaBelle had the misfortune of killing an opponent in a boxing match with us in Toronto. This worried the boy for some time but he is now staging a comeback and wrestling fans are behind him in his endeavour.

X—X—X

Tyrder Horn, on the other hand is quite a man of mystery and nothing is to be known about him except in the ring. He has appeared on some very good cards in Western Ontario and the fans are quite keen as a topnotcher as he gives them many a thrill throughout the bout.

What a difference ten years has made—all was in the season of 1921-22 when Toronto last won the Stanley Cup. Of that team there are but two players left in the National Hockey League today they are John Ross Roach of the New York Americans and Reg Noble of the Detroit Falcons. In the season of 1931-32 Toronto carried only nine players while today a big league hockey team carries from 15 to 18 players—quite a difference.

CHIEF OF POLICE MAY PROSECUTE

VANCOUVER, Nov. 7.—Warning that merchants who do not observe the Remembrance Day holiday on Wednesday, Nov. 11, will be prosecuted was issued today by Acting Chief of Police John Murdock. The chief declared he had received word from the Attorney General's Department at Victoria that the holiday must be observed by merchants and business houses.

Talking about boxing did you ever hear what happened to Jack Dempsey before he got his first chance? Well, one day a broad-shouldered youth set up pugnacious dropped into a Philadelphia fight club and asked for a chance to get on the next card. All he wanted was $10.00. He was turned down because he had no experience. That ten-dollar youngster was Jack Dempsey and the man who turned him down was Jim Dougherty, who now handles Georges Godfrey, the Black Menace. Dempsey went from Philadelphia to Buffalo where he persuaded Charlie Murray, a Buffalo fight promoter, to give him a chance — and $40.00. Dempsey knocked his adversa kicking and got eight fights in a row from Murray. That gave Dempsey his start in the fight game and that is why Murray and Dempsey are such close friends to this day.

Winged Wheelers Can Also Cinch Big Four Title Today

Toronto, Ont., Nov 7 (CP) —Last week-end the eyes of all Eastern Canadian sportdom were fixed on Hamilton where the mighty Tigers and Montreal Winged Wheelers fought it out for possession of the Big Four group championship, but today the battle front moved farther west when Queen's journey to London to meet Western University in a game which will likely decide the Intercollegiate group championship for 1931. One other college game is scheduled, when the luckless Varsity twelve tackle McGill of Montreal.

Coach Buck McKenna and his corps of 24 players left the Union Station last night for Montreal where Argos will meet the undefeated Winged Wheelers aggregation this afternoon. The Montreal era need but a win to assure themselves of the group leadership but the Scullers feel confident they can hand Coach Foran's squad their first setback of the season's campaign.

BOYCOTT UPON JAPAN RESULT?

GENEVA, Nov. 7.—The possibility of concerted withdrawal of diplomatic representatives from Tokio as the next move in the Sino-Japanese conflict was considered by the League of Nations leaders last night in planning for the next meeting of the Council, in Paris on Nov 16.

In fact, the legal opinion of the Secretariat, under orders from Secretary-General Sir Eric Drummond was studying Article 15 of the League Covenant to determine whether the member nations could be asked to remove their Ambassadors and Ministers if Japan continues to reject measures of appeasement. This article deals with sanctions of a military and economic nature to be invoked against an aggressor nation.

It is understood that this examination envisages the practicability of levying an economic boycott against Japan, but such action remains in the background for the present. When the Council reassembles a three-fold program will be put before it, according to League authorities.

BUCK GOES TO WITNESS BOX

Tells of Relations of Branch at Regina With Leopold

By Jack Hambleton, C.P. Staff Writer

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 6—"To members of the Communist party of Canada, Sergeant Leopold was known as a devoted and faithful worker in the cause; one who was always ready to entertain our organizers; and one who always prepared to help out financially. He was always willing to pay his own expenses to our conventions and meetings. With these words, Tim Buck, alleged leader of the Communist party in Canada, told how Sergeant John Leopold, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, known in Communist circles as "Comrade Jack Rawlings" had acted as secretary of the Regina, Sask., branch of the party.

Buck, with eight others, is facing trial this week on charges of conspiracy and acting as members of an unlawful association, and with other parties to a seditious conspiracy.

The crown concluded its case, examined on Monday, shortly before noon today, and Buck was the first witness called by the defence. The alleged leader of the party testified as to its formation here at a time when "war hysteria" was still prevalent, as to the growth of the party among labor unions and similar bodies a "boom" period, and of the "left wing" formed. Eventually this party, with the "legal" or Worker party, was formed.

Rise of Leopold

He had just concluded evidence concerning the operations of Sergeant Leopold and had told how the mounted policeman had risen rapidly in the councils of the party, when noon adjournment was reached. But prior to that, he had explained that the Communist party was working for the benefit of the working class. He had never advocated nor insinuated that the masses should force or violence in furthering their aims, but had tried to cause strikes in the interests of the improvement of the "bourgeoisie" against the working class.

The crown's case closed with filing of many documents linking Moscow and Canada. A long thesis on Communism, written by N. Vasiliev of Moscow, was read in part. Extracts explained to the Communist party the means which should be adopted in order to main tain the secrecy of communications. Coffee pots and water was recommended for use as invisible ink

Documents Produced

Vasiliev also pointed out that proletarian "self-defense" should be organized. Policemen had broken up dozens of sections of the proletarian self-defense because "the comrade do not have the slightest conception of self defense. "It is recommended that the comrades should go into training in throwing stones. If they would, it said, "when they think work and each morning, instead of going through gymnastics exercises, engage in throwing stones at a target 25 paces away." The result of such a training on any school may be quite different.

"Then one of the members of the party committee should be in charge of organization of work in the army," the document concluded.

Shortly after the crown concluded its case, the jury retired while Mr. Justice Wright presiding, and Hugh J. MacDonald, defense counsel, discussed certain evidence. Mr. MacDonald asked that the trial be adjourned until Monday as that day might study this evidence. His request was refused. His Lordship declaring he wished to bring the trial to a speedy conclusion.

Buck will return to the stand this afternoon.

Those charged are Buck, Tom Ewen, John Boychuk, Amos T. Hill, Malcolm L. Bruce, Samuel Cohen, Mathew Popovitch, Mike Golinski and Thomas Cacic.

At The Belle

LIONEL BARRYMORE IN

"GUILTY HANDS" AT BELLE

The personal triumph scored by Lionel Barrymore in "A Free Soul" at the veteran criminal attorney brought a reward of more work instead of a vacation.

Bayard Veiller, noted mystery play dramatist, was working on an original story of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer when he saw Barrymore in the Norma Shearer picture and went right back to write his principal characterization as that role boldly but Barrymore could play it.

The new Veiller thriller, "Guilty Hands", coming to the Belle, Wednesday, marks Barrymore in the featured role, again that of a veteran criminal attorney.

Directed by W. S. Van Dyke II, W. S. Van Dyke has produced a picture with the supporting cast including Kay Francis, Madge Evans, William Bakewell, C. Aubrey Smith, Polly Moran and Alan Mowbray.

Before "A Free Soul" surprisers revealed his efforts in directing and it was with some reluctance that he again turned actor to meet popular demand.

As the murdered in "Guilty Hands" Barrymore has the pivotal role of a shyster lawyer who plans to commit the crime in order to save his daughter from wrecking her life. When he does not use all his resources to shift the blame but that he takes a hand and gives a startling twist of the dramatic climax.

TWO LEADING MEN

WITH NANCY CARROLL

Miss Pearl Dresserware Monday

A beautiful blue Dresserware gift, one of the most desired of the entire set will be presented to each lady attending the Belle Monday evening, the management announce that not more than one gift can be acquired by any lady, and the article cannot be purchased after Monday evening.

Nancy Carroll has two leading men in her latest starring picture "Personal Maid," which opens at the Belle, Monday, for two days, matinee daily. They are Pat O' Brien, recently seen as the young reporter in "The Front Page" and Norman Raymond, a newcomer to pictures although well known on the New York stage.

"Personal Maid" brings Miss Carroll in a much more vivacious role than any she has been seen in for some time. The story is one of behind-the-scenes drama of a young girl from New York's East Side who enters the beau monde through the servants' entrance and comes out under a canopy, a gilded bride, wiser, but, perhaps, no happier.

The picture was made from the best-seller novel by Grace Perkins, author of "Mistress" and "Private Nurse," both of which have enjoyed a wide sale in book form and have supplied material for exciting moving picture. Miss Perkins has looked for pulling actual conditions and characters into her stories.

Nancy Carroll plays the part of Nora Ryan, who, as a maid, becomes so indispensable to her employer, the wealthy Mrs. Gary, that she is ambitioned to rise in the wayward and handsome son of the family back to the straight and narrow way. She falls in love with the careless boy, and, at the same time, attracts the attention of an interesting self-made business friend of the family she works for.

Convinced that all it takes to be a "lady" is money and environment she sneaks off for a holiday, posing as a young heiress. Her masquerade is discovered, however, and she is brought back to the love with the son of the family who has finally "seen the light."

Throughout the tense romantic situations of the story, a hearty vein of humor keeps the action airy with laughter.

A funny Billy House comedy, the popular Fox Newsreel, a tuneful Sonologue, "Little Annie Rooney" and "Fish and Pay" a very entertaining Travelatk, are announced for exhibition on the same program.

At The Capitol

"TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR ROOM"

Primitive smashing combat between two strong men is the spectacular thrill of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," starring William Farnum, the all-talking picture which opens at the Capitol Theatre Monday, for 3 days. This modern sensational version of an old dramatic bringi together again William Farnum and Marc Lawrence, the most famous fight team in all photoplay history. Their battle in the original "Spoilers" is remembered vividly by hundreds of thousands in audiences for years as an epic of its kind. Those fans who know how to fight meet again in the thundering climax of "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" as the two are trained as strenuously as two prize fighters preparing for a championship match.

When they met on the set, under the studio lights, they were the best physical specimen of action

MEN EQUIPPED WITH CLOTHING

Those Going in Draft to North Supplied With Needs

All is ready—all are equipped—Yesterday afternoon men, who have been drafted to go north, from Belleville and district, reported to the Government Employment office, and those who did not have adequate clothing, were supplied with such from the civic relief office in the city hall, under the direction of Miss Lynch. Most of the thirty men, who are in the draft were fairly well equipped but those who needed clothing were supplied. Underwear, sox, shoes, topcoats, raincoats and overcoats and overcoats were delivered to the men, who needed them. Some only called for topcoats, while others only needed smaller articles of wearing apparel.

The draft are to leave the C.N.R. International Limited on Sunday evening and they are a happy lot thinking many of their acquaintances opportunities to go to work.

Miss Lynch also passed out some warm clothing to other cases, who applied at the relief office yesterday afternoon. These were local people, who were in dire need of adequate clothing due to the sudden cold snap, that has recently hit this district. Later it is expected that this relief work will be carried out in a much more systemized manner as they are not prepared to meet the sudden demand on such a short notice.

"SICK HEADACHE?"

It is not necessary to give in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Aspirin and heads off.

Keep Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headache, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. In every package of Aspirin tablets are given directions which cover colds, headaches, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, and even rheumatism.

The tablets stamped Bayer won't fail you, and can't harm you. They don't depress the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them whenever you need them, and take enough to end the pain. Aspirin is made in Canada.

NO CONFIRMATION HEARD IN ORIENT

Tokyo Hears That China Has Openly Declared War on Nippon Forces

Reports Lack Official Confirmation, But There is Fighting

MOBILIZE FORCES

Japan Has Prepared Sharp Note to League

Tokyo, Nov. 9 (AP)—Reports that the Chinese General Mah Chan-Shan had declared war against Japan and actually opened hostilities by bombarding the position at Taheing, Manchuria, where he was defeated by Japanese troops last week, failed to bring confirmation today.

Both reports lacked confirmation in official quarters. The first of these came to the newspaper Nichi from Mukden.

Shortly afterward Tokyo was stirred by an extra edition of the newspaper Asahi announcing General Mah, head of the Heilungkiang Province army which was routed by a smaller force of Japanese troops at the Nonni bridge heard last week, had actually opened hostilities on the Japanese.

Asahi said the bombardment began by the Chinese this morning. It could be heard as far as the position of the Origin.

General Mah's troops, which according to estimates here number somewhere between 7,000 and 10,000, were said to be using field artillery and machine guns.

Japanese forces at last reports were only a little in excess of 1,000.

The Nichi Nichi dispatch from Mukden said General Mah had forced the mobilization of the Chinese forces of Kirin Province, adjacent to Heilungkiang Province, and their union with his army to "fight Japan to the very last man."

In the fact of reports indicating Chinese troops were concentrating south of Angenchi, and last week's battleground, Japan decided to move more troops to that area.

In the diplomatic phase of the controversy she prepared a sharp note sent to the latest League of Nations note.

War office reports here said the Chinese had been sniping at the Japanese line, although the main force of Chinese was about 18 miles north of the Japanese position at Taheing.

Japanese asserted they had intercepted Chinese messages indicating plans for Chinese administration south of Angenchi was a scheme to entice Japanese troops farther northward into Manchuria and thus supposedly strengthen the Chinese case before the League of Nations.

Speech From Throne Will Be Exceptionally Brief

(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Ottawa, Nov. 9.—(Canadian Press Cable)—On the eve of the opening of parliament by King George tomorrow, Ottawa and Canada eagerly awaited the speech which Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will make tonight at the Lord Mayor's banquet, a speech which has been traditionally one of important announcements.

Tomorrow at noon the King and Queen will drive from Buckingham Palace to Westminster, where in the House of Lords, His Majesty will read the speech from the throne. Like the speech it should be exceptionally brief.

Then the little Motherhood, it is conceded, that the speech from the throne will go further than but mining the skirts of the Iron hand for the national government, which resulted on the basis of the Prime Minister's appeal to the public during the last election campaign.

Ministers of the old and the new National Governments today trans ferred their offices to the newly appointed ministers. Lord Reading, former secretary for foreign affairs, the Marquis of Crewe, former secretary for war, Lord Amulree, former secretary for Scotland and Sir Austen Chamberlain, former first port of the admiralty—were the first re ceivers. They left the Foreign office shelves at home and daily take their little desk.

ONTARIO HAS REAL FUTURE

Mining Industry of Province Lauded By Hon. Chas. McCrea

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 9. — (By the Canadian Press.) — Bright is the future for the mining industry in Ontario was predicted by Hon. Charles McCrea, Provincial Minister of Mines, opening the new laboratory building of Mining Engineering at the University of Toronto Saturday.

"From all I can learn from geologists and diamond drillers, there is not anything else that presents a greater future in Ontario," he said.

Mining in Northern Ontario possessed an advantage over the same industry in South Africa and India, he said, because of the lower temperature. Temperature increased three degrees every 1,000 feet in depth, he explained, and climatic conditions should therefore make it possible to go to lower levels here than in warmer countries.

Additional Buildings Planned at School for Deaf

EXPANSION PROGRAM AT DEAF SCHOOL

It is Expected Over Quarter Million Dollars Will Be Spent

THREE BUILDINGS

Vocational Building Planned For Construction

In a construction program with an estimated expenditure of over a quarter of a million dollars, soon to be undertaken by the Department of Education at the Ontario School for the Deaf, the local unemployment problem will be solved to a material degree.

The project which is contemplated and which will be commenced as soon as the necessary plans and specifications have been completed by architects are waiting on them, calls for the construction of three new units of buildings to cost from an extra 200 pupils, the units to be, when combined, almost as large as the main building now existing. Vocational experts from the Department of Education were in Belleville for a thorough canvass of the institute last Wednesday and are enumerated in their opinion that the work should be commenced without delay. The buildings which will probably be of brick construction to match the rest of the existing departments will necessitate the employing of some hundreds of men, directly and indirectly, and will constitute a full winter's work in which it is expected local men will be given the preference. As yet no tenders have been let for the work and the probable contractor has been unannounced.

School Crowded

When interviewed by H. B. Petterly, superintendent of the school for the deaf, stated this at present, conditions as to the crowding of the pupils now attending the school were very bad, and sixty forty-nine boys were compelled to sleep in the recreation room portion of the building as sleeping quarters. With the completion of the three hundred and thirty children at present it is expected that by the end of the school year the attendance will be increased to three hundred and fifty. The new units is plainly apparent that new buildings should be constructed at once.

Vocational School

Another plan which is to be included in the project now being drafted by Mr. Petterly has been fighting for since he took over the command at the school, is the construction of a separate school where the deaf may after their seven night school thats will be instructed in the various trades. The vocational advantage will greatly offset their present handicap and should be the means of a more profitable worth of business after graduation with an income and assurance they would otherwise not if that training had not been given.

Reporter Sees Typical Case of Need at Present Time

Mute Appeal of Mother, Pathetic Look in Father's Eye

REPORTER MUSES

You who have been asked to give, to give what you can—a job to the man, or something to the kids, the wife and kiddies—take a little walk with the reporter on a little walk with the reporter on a mission of mercy. Not that he is going to tell you how much he has had little or no work in months, and to whom and of what kind bread is acceptable. This man asked the reporter to accompany him on his errand of charity, and together with a large basket of food and a really good appetite we went looking for "the typical case."

We came to the house. We entered. And we found our 'typical case'. Not the stark plain. Not the unwholesome, the smelly kind of poverty; not the kind that sometimes makes you feel that it was a regular pleasure to be charitable, and on every day occurrence in this sort of family, but the poverty that is not to be told, the poverty that goes hand in hand with scrubbing, with—well—with cleanliness, though frayed curtains framing windows that bespeak the poverty that is to be found where there is really no acceptance of the offer depended on what arrangements had beenmade by his executive for political meetings in the riding.

Voters go to the polls in South Wellington on Nov. 18. The seat was vacated by the death recently of Hon. The old mineral spring situated along the track on the west side of Belleville still continues to bubble and gush it's salty, acrid tasting water. Many older residents of this district who claim it is the best mineral water they have ever had, are better than most brands they buy in the stores—and we really visit to this spot, carrying all sorts of bottles, jars and other holders for this fluid. Others they keep on their shelves at home and daily take their little dose.

SEES DUCK RUSH AT AN AIRPLANE

A plane flying east in the bright sunlight or a November afternoon and a flock of ducks moving westward in threes, Edward S. They came right on into the plane, as he thought, but not one fell however, and he was left guessing as to whether the swish and whir of the propeller rewarded all the creatures from the plane. After the plane passed the ducks or the ducks passed the plane, Mr. S. May thought he saw the birds veer slightly lower.

Were the ducks blinded by the dazzling sunlight?

Loughran Meets Paulino Uscudum

Many Interesting Bouts Slated For Week's Programme

NEW YORK, Nov. 9. — Tommy Loughran, who has fought under 139 ring battles since he began his flattic career in 1918, this week will add one of the three leading heavyweights he never has met in a business way to his list when Paulino Uscudum of Spain. The other two are champion Max Schmeling and Primo Carnera and Tommy may get a shot at both before another month has passed.

Loughran, a strong favorite as a result of his string of eleven successive victories, meets Paulino in the head-line ten rounder in Madison Square Garden Friday night. Paulino, perhaps, has seen his best days but he still is a dangerous and ready workman who will extend any heavy weight in the business. Loughran, however, figures to be too clever for him. Uscudum's record, lately, compiled after he suffered a technical knockout by Jack Sharkey, includes two victories over Jack Gross, and one apiece over Joe Sekya, Max Baer, Ernie Schaaf, Victorio Campolo, Johnny Risko, Tuffy Griffiths, Stieg Levinsky and Dick Daniels.

CAPT. J. YOTT DIES AT 98

Plied Great Lakes Early Days of Navigation, Retired For Years

The sudden death of Captain John Yott which occurred this morning at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. T. B. Roolin, Redmersville, has removed another familiar veteran of the Great Lakes. The late Captain Yott was the son of the late Joseph and Harriet Yott and was born on Wolfe Island on May 7th, 1833. He followed the call of the sea early in life and as a man Captain Yott went to sea and for 46 years he sailed the Great Lakes. Many vessels were used in those days and his experiences were many and varied.

Captain Yott was of United Empire Loyalist stock and lived in the vicinity of Kingston until he left the sea and settled down in the village of Roblin's Mills some 70 years ago. After residing there for about 31 years he moved to Redmersville where he made his residence with his daughter Mrs. T. B. Roblin.

Captain Yott has enjoyed the very best of health during the years of his retirement and it was with much regret that the people of his community heard of his sudden passing. He was a very interesting old gentleman and his many thrilling tales of the sea had made him a welcome friend and he greatly miss their friend and neighbor.

During his younger life, when he was a sailor, Captain Yott was the owner and captain of many lake vessels that plied between Canada and United States and also supervised the construction of all his ships, so keenly did he follow the sailing profession.

Captain Yott's ship of predecessed him about 25 years ago and it was one of life's sorrows when death, dear wife was taken from him. He leaves one son, Joseph at his home Kingston before moving to Roblin's Mills and made many friends in the heart of Kingston.

His personal friends were shocked to hear of his death as he had been his one ambition to realize attaining the age of 100 years and had he lived but one year and five months he would have realized his life's ambition. Captain Yott came from a sturdy family as his father born him at the time of his death.

POLICE RAID CHINESE GAME

Eleven Men Fined For Breaking Lord's Day Act

Placidly playing away at the old game about a huge table in the Chinese club on Front street, as only Chinese can play, intent and silent, absorbed in their winnings and losings, eleven men were surprised on Sunday afternoon about four thirty o'clock by Sergeant Detective Richard Donnelly and Traffic Officer Byles. On the table were huge quantities of specially their chair instead of motoring in the bright sunlight of a lovely autumn afternoon.

"Been to Sunday School today, boys?" asked the detective.

"No, all going next Sunday".

Well what happens next Sunday was then no business of the officer who made the query, they would have to go down to the police station. They didn't like it but all but one agreed, the latter said to be allowed to follow the police. "I know you all and if you dare to try to get away, I'll find you", was the polite advice given the men as they started from the club room to the station, the oldest of the men following along after the detective.

The march to the police station was accomplished without incident and bail was at once thought of by the men, when they were told that a charge of breaking the Lord's Day Act was preferred against them. The eleven put up fifty dollars for bail and were released.

Today one Chinese came to court on behalf of the rest and put up the additional five dollars necessary which was the fine, and not just the night made up the fine of five dollars a piece or $55.

The men are the names of Lem Loy, Lem Yuen, Ling Chougn, Wong Douck, Harry George, Lem Mon, Lem Foy, Chung Yuak, Wo Lee, Lem Kee and Charles Wong.

Rev. H. B. Neal Speaks on Teaching of Bible with Respect to War

REMEMBERED DEAD

"Abolition of war," was the keynote of the sermon delivered by the Rev. H. B. Neal in Bridge street United Church, last night. As the service was the annual Armistice Service the church was decorated for the occasion. All hymns and prayers were of a national nature and the selection and solos by the choir were in reverence to the "fallen dead." Especially did Rev. Neal mention those who have given their lives in the late war.

For his text, Rev. Mr. Neal chose the 22nd verse of the 20th chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew: "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will take his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." Also he used the fourth verse of the second chapter of Isaiah ending thus: "nation shall not lift up sword against nation neither shall they learn war any more."

Rev. Mr. Neal pointed out that these words of the Master were very simple and direct and no one could mistake their meaning. "War is futile and suicidal," explained the speaker, "and we are learning these passages," that we learn the real mind of God. "Man is born not on to say that the present generation was not wholly concerned about peace, but it was the duty of the nation should be in the minds of the people.

Ten Million Dead

In the past war, which was fought to protect the weak there were ten million known dead, thirteen million civilians killed, twenty million wounded and the cost of the war was $350,000,000 and for a period spread over from the time of Jesus Christ was known. This staggering and colossal cost has caused famine, pestilence and even death itself." Rev. Mr. Neal went on to point out that war caused decoplism, discord and disfellowship among nations. This is clearly pointed out in the church's life and in evidence today in the world especially by the unemployment who were brought up during the time of war and strife.

Now Under Arms

"After thirteen years of so-called peace there are more men under arms today than the world had in 1914," pointed out Rev. Mr. Neal. "Does this carry out the principles that he was not to be fought for?" He went on to say that war means everything that Christ did not intend during the world to have and also everything that He intended not to have. It is thought that the people of the world were just beginning to really think as the Saviour had meant them to and perhaps some of that great prophecy of Isaiah's would be realized "There shall be war no more."

Rev. Mr. Neal explained that if there was ever another war that the civilization of the world would be completely wiped out as each day and hour more deadly materials were being invented to exterminate mankind. Every day new devices to spread disease, pestilence and death are being discovered in the laboratories of the modern scientist. He continued to say that it was up to the church of our Lord Christ to rise up and stamp out all causes and reasons for war and make that great prophecy of Isaiah be a reality. Christianity is a power must use its influence so as to not break the faith with those ten million dead if this great day is to be realized.

The time is now when man should lift up his voice for that great cause and keep the faith with those whose influence has passed," said the speaker. He pointed out that now was the time to organize for that great work and then perhaps the world would realize that war would forever be impossible; which was the great teaching of the Saviour.

In closing Rev. Mr. Neal quoted that wonderful passage "Greater love hath no man than this, that a lay down his life for his friend."

Rev. Mr. Neal then asked the congregation to rise and observe one minute's silence in honour of those who fell in the late war, after which he offered a prayer for 'those who never came back."

After the closing hymn the National Anthem was sung in honour of Armistice Day.

BOY "BANDITS" STAGE HOLDUP

"Doll" Carried Off Amid Screams of Little Girl

Three youthful appearing bandits terrorized a numerous crowd with weapons, and disguised with the aid of caps pulled down over their faces, escaped on the run after the dash of an uptown apartment house, early Saturday evening, and amid the hysterical shrieks of three little girls, scooped up their loot and quickly escaped up a nearby gangway.

Although a good description of them has been given by lookers-on, by far they have eluded the machinery of the law, and as yet have not left the apprehended. Valuable clues, however, have been given and the police dragnet is expected momentarily.

Described as being about the average age of seven years, the three were dark clothing, and were without coats. The leader of the trio had on a pullover sweater with black stripes on a grey background, knee pants, black stockings and tennis shoes. He was of the dark, grayish tweed material. The second wore a khaki shirt, blue knee pants, black stockings and shoes were brown and he had a cap on the back of his head. He also is also described as having a dark complexion. The third is the very vague description of the other was obtained owing to the fact that he stayed in the background and was not so noticeable. He was described however as being shorter than the other two and perhaps a year younger. He also wore dark clothing. All were provided with sugar, ugly-looking cap pistols, but no shots were fired and "the gun" was don e so quickly that little resistance was offered.

Their loot, consisting of two dolls —one a "mama doll"—was lying out on the verandah in plain sight, and it is thought that the job was unplanned and premeditated as far as is known, was used by the young bandits, although they were not noticed immediately prior to the raid, they were distinctly seen by several persons running up the neighboring gangway shortly after. It is thought that the object of the "kidnapping" is one of ransom, but so far no communication has been received from them and the anxiety is expressed by the "families" concerned.

BREAK-IN AT SUPPLY CO.

Employee Saw Man-Leaving. Ten Dollars Taken From Till

When Orlif Lloyd, an employee of the Belleville Supply Co., entered the office of the firm on Sunday morning about seven-thirty o'clock, he found that there was a man hurriedly making escape from the side door. Mr. Lloyd at once called the city police and Sergeant Booth and Constable Hinchcliffe were soon on the scene of the "break in." No trace of anyone could be found or the man, but upon investigation in the office it was discovered that about $10.00 in small change was missing. The office of the Garage Supply Co. is located in the south end of the old Brown foundry at the intersection of Station and Foundry streets.

REV. C. CLARKE IS INDUCTED

Former Rector of Christ Church is Welcomed

TORONTO, Nov. 9. — Rev. C. E. Clarke was instituted and inducted as rector of the parish of St. Michael and All Angels yesterday morning. Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Toronto, assisted by Ven. George Warren, archdeacon of York, performing the office.

Extending a welcome to the new rector, who was formerly rector of Christ Church, Belleville, the bishop of Toronto paid tribute to the late rector, Rev. Canon Brain, who for 40 years had been spiritual father to the parish. The bishop hoped that Mr. Clarke with the same loyal co-operation as the parish had given Canon Brain and predicted a future even greater than his past.

"Some people," said Archdeacon Warren, "say the prayer book is out of date, I say it will be out of date when the world ends, meantime it is equal to the task and purpose for which it was given. Some take a part of it and forgetting the rest say 'this is the Lord's service, that is man-made. With all the strength that is in me I say that every service in the Prayer Book is the Lord's and has His authority."

SKUNK ODOR AT LAST GOES

Smell of Burning Leaves Succeeds Acrid Perfume

Late last week in the peace and serenity of the atmosphere of the quiet residential district of Dundas street was invaded by an odor, penetrating and acrid. Passersby stopped, sniffed, shrugged and went on. The odor grew. It rose in volume and blandness. Passersby again stopped, sniffed, and shrugged again with more decided shrugs, and then, one glances towards a house which seemed to stand out more prominently in the atmosphere than the rest. U.S. TROOPS CALLED OUT

Other Soldiers Stand By After Attempts on Boy Emperor

Peiping, Nov. 9—The Fifteenth United States Infantry, called out last night, were standing by in Tientsin today, after a mob attacked native police on the border between the Chinese city and the Japanese concession. One Japanese soldier was killed.

The United States soldiers were awaiting orders from Colonel Jas. D. Taylor, and Italian and French troops also were standing by in their respective concessions. Three companies of Chinese troops were preparing to intervene.

It was estimated that between 1,000 and 2,000 armed civilians, dressed in Chinese clothes, participated in the attack, which followed an unsuccessful attempt on Saturday night to assassinate the former boy-Emperor of China, Hsuan Tung, who has been living in the Japanese concession since 1924 under the name of Henry Pu-yi.

Fruit Hides Bomb

A Chinese hotel manager handed an alien a basket of fruit containing a bomb, which failed to explode. When the assassination attempted, he said he had been given the basket by a Chinese in the French concession, and had been instructed to hand it to the former Chinese emperor without comment.

Police said they would give no motive for the attempt, but believe it was connected with recent rumors to the effect that the Japanese were planning to establish Hsuan Tung as Emperor of Manchuria, in succession to Governor Chang Hsueh-liang, who is said to prefer living quietly in Tientsin as a private citizen.

Chinese reports said later that a mob of 1,500 armed Chinese, together with some Japanese, had attacked the Japanese concession into Chinese territory and disarmed the police.

The few who were arrested were quoted as saying they had been paid $40 in silver, supposedly by Tientsin dollars, and $10 in Canadian money, to participate in the attack. Canadian money is rare in Tientsin. It was believed the onslaught was directed against police station, the Civil Governor's headquarters and the railway station.

No Electricity Going to States Excepting the Obligations

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 9 (CP) — The Ontario Hydro System does not export to the United States any horsepower of electricity over and above its obligations incurred in the Ontario Government purchase deal said C. A. McGuire, Hydro Electric Power Commissioner, last night.

Answering recent criticisms by Dr. George McQuibban, Liberal M. P. for Wellington South, and Mr. Milton, Ont., Mr. MacGuire said, "There is no power being exported other than that which the Power Commission has contracted to supply to the Ontario Power Company and had to assume the contract. It runs until 1950."

3 CHILDREN ARE KILLED

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 9.—Three children, trapped on a trestle of the Big Four railway, were run down and killed by a fast train late Saturday. The victims were Hazel Parker, 7 and her sister, Gladys aged 10, and Maxine Vance aged 9.

The children were crossing the trestle hand in hand, and had reached a point about halfway when a passenger train rounded a curve and bore down on them. When the engineer sounded his whistle, Gladys looked around and drew her companions to the edge of the trestle. A moment later the train struck them.

Giant British Plane With Room for 120 to Ferry to Canada

Will Weigh 60 Tons and Have Engines of 60,000 H.P.

OTHERS MADE

Accommodation of The Finest to be Provided For Passengers

LONDON, Nov. 9 — Designed to carry 120 passengers on a trans-Atlantic service to Canada, the world's largest flying boat is being planned by the British air ministry. The new liner will be nearly twice the size of the German Do-X and, with a full load of fuel, will weigh about sixty tons. It will have a flying range of 2,900 miles and a speed of 120 miles an hour.

The air ministry, it is understood, is planning other giant machines to bring the whole empire into direct contact with London.

A thirty-five ton supermarine Napier flying boat, similar in size and power to the Do-X, is already on the stocks.

Accommodation for passengers on the giant British-Canadian ship will be provided on a gruvsome scale. The chief pilot, navigator and other officers will be housed in a superstructure above the main cabin, similar to the bridge of a ship. The number of engines has not been decided, but a craft of this size would need at least 60,000 horsepower. The liner will be illuminated throughout by electricity, and radio telephony will be installed behind the hull.

WAR'S TOLL RECOGNIZED

Rev. Dr. Bell Draws Attention to Importance of Remembrance

Remembrance Day was recognized in Bridge Street United church at yesterday's morning service. Though Rev. Dr. Bell's sermon was not devoted wholly to a discourse on an armistice day theme, he had in mind the event of sermons in the beatitudes, reached the seventh, "Blessed are the peacemakers," which fittingly worked into the recognition of the day.

Previous to the sermon, Rev. Bell asked the congregation to rise and pay tribute to the memory of the members of the church, who were in active evil, when they died for their country in the Great War. The names of these members were read, followed by a minute of silence and then the choir sang an appropriate anthem.

In his announcements, the doctor drew attention to the remembrance day services at the Armouries Wednesday night, and eloquently spoke in behalf of the relief work of the central relief committee.

At the Sunday School session in the afternoon, Mr. Fred S. Deacon took charge and this service was entirely of a commemorative character. The scholars paid tribute to the former members of the school who were killed overseas, and Mr. Deacon spoke also of the former superintendents and officers of the Sunday school, stating that the scholars had a list of members with thankfulness these men and women who had left the organization and worked so earnestly in the up-building of the school.

NEW ANGLES OF DISASTER

Chance Event Saves 700 Present Rescues of Rest

New York, N.Y.—Several entirely new aspects concerning the sinking of the British liner Titanic are revealed in the files of Hearst-Hostron's audiographical volume, "Home from the Sea."

Sir Arthur, now retired commodore of the Cunard Line, was owner of the liner Carpathia at the time of the Titanic sinking. His volume published he reveals that only the keenest of the Carpathia's wireless operator enabled the latter vessel to receive and answer the Titanic's SOS broadcast when she struck a gigantic iceberg.

Just prior to sailing a strict antisteurish witches act had been installed on the Carpathia. Only one operator was allowed and he generally retired at midnight. On the night of the disaster, however, says Sir Arthur, the operator remained at his post until 4 o'clock in the morning. He had just made his log entry in pencil and was leading over to unfasten his shoes with the ear-phones attached to his head when he heard the faint SOS and the Titanic's plea for assistance.

The Carpathia swung off her course and raced for the scene. Arriving there at four o'clock, an hour and a half after the Titanic had gone down. Some 706 persons were rescued.

While it was what Sir Arthur terms a "chance event" which enabled the Carpathia to arrive in time to save this number, he states it was also a chance event that the Carpathia was not able to save the thousands that were drowned. If the rescue ship had been 25 miles nearer the Titanic this could have been accomplished, he says.

Work in First Seadrome Starts Era in Oceanic Service

Chain of Stepping Stones to Overseas Flying

"ISLANDS" IN SEAS

WILMINGTON, Del — A chain of stepping stones for trans-Atlantic air service may have its beginning next year. A full-size seadrome, first of a proposed series of eight to be anchored as floating airports in the ocean, is projected for completion in August, 1932.

The inventor of the man-made islands is Edward R. Armstrong who hopes to begin shop work this week on the Langley as the first seadrome will be named. Armstrong conceived the seadrome project in 1913 and has carried out tests on models ranging from four to 36 feet long and from a few pounds to two tons in weight.

The full-size artificial islands will be steel and iron open-work structures with a six-acre desk 70 feet above the waterline. Ballast chambers 160 feet below the surface and containing iron ore will give stability.

A 1500-ton reinforced concrete anchor, resting on the ocean bed, has been designed to keep each seadrome in place and allow it to swing for facing always into the wind.

Armstrong plans to station the first seadrome 350 nautical miles southeast of New York in the gulf stream just below the fog and storm belt. The estimated cost is $4,000,000 when anchored. Until further funds for the ships can be built, it is planned to serve as an intermediate step on an air route to Bermuda and as a mid-ocean repair.

To shorten the course between the United States and Europe, Armstrong proposes a hotel, bar, and recreational facilities of a resort. Such will measure 1,000 feet in length, be 340 feet wide in the centre and 160 feet at the ends, and have a structural weight of 17,500 tons and displacement of 50,000 tons on service duty.

Personnel on each, including hotel staff, would number 36 with accommodations for 100 overnight guests and 400 guests by day.

The estimated fare one way, between Armstrong and Europe has been palced at between $350 and $500.

"Archdeacon of Arctic" Tells Story of Missions in "Circle"

Eighty Per Cent. of Eskimos Live in Snow Huts, He Says

Pagans believing an unseen world populated with spirits, making death a horrible punishment, was the faith of the Eskimo a little over twenty years ago, Archdeacon Whalley told believers in God and in Jesus Christ in his sermon at Christ Church yesterday afternoon, with a fearsome belief that such simple things as a child being born in the love of its mother.

So spoke Venerable Archdeacon Canning of the Arctic at Christ Church on Sunday morning concerning the conditions as they were some years ago among the Eskimos with what they are today as a result of mission work of the Church of England.

"The Archdeacon of the Arctic" brought a message to the congregation that was full of interest in the work lying before the church in the Northland, and also of the people of the Arctic Circle, of hospital treatment and also of the education of the young boys and girls of the north, to enable them to combat the menace which the coming of the white population will bring.

Saving the Population

The airplane has brought the north to within a nine days' journey from the south which used to take a year, but letters and provisions can come in once a year only, era, that is in September. Efforts are being made in one of the settlements to have radio reception for the benefit of the Arctic dwellers. Speaking of the coming of the white population into the Arctic the Archdeacon said: "You cannot leave the boys and girls of the Arctic in ignorance. The white men are coming and that has already been marked by degradation of the native. The only way to offset this is to give the boys and girls of the Eskimo education and enlightenment.

"We are not spoiling these children. We teach the boys to hunt and skin the caribou, to make boats and to build snow huts and the girls are being taught to be Christians and to use the value of cleanliness.

The archdeacon pointed out that these folk cannot be neglected. Though their spirit is of copper hue, though they dress in furs and the Eskimo dog pulls the sledge, they live in snow huts in the winter and in tents in the summer. The idea of all that has been said about them not living in snow huts. They are the finest people in the world. Are the illiterate, they have the same goodness of heart as we have. The Eskimo life is not all that is desirable, whether from regarded from a cattle and children are not cared for in the Arctic as they are. We are not free in the civilized world, and protected from the influences that degrade and kill, but when you get close to the men and women, the children of the Arctic, you find them just the same as we are," remarked the Archdeacon.

He had chosen for his text the words: "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's." Christ, at the cross who believe, do not, who will?" asked the Archdeacon. "If we do not we are denying God's love for ourselves and shutting out God's image from ourselves. There is not true that law and force can exact more than love. We may have the best possible belief and yet utterly miss its spirit unless it expresses itself in sacrifice."

The Archdeacon defined the four classes who inhabit the Arctic, the white as the trader, and the representatives of the church, the Indians, the Eskimos and the half-breeds.

Rev. A. L. Geen assisted in the services.

GLORIOUS DEAD REMEMBERED

Ensign Calvert Conducted Inspiring Service to Glorious Dead

At their annual Armistice Service held Sunday, the local Salvation Army Citadel was the scene for a very solemn and commemorative service. The service was under the direction of Ensign Calvert who gave a short address on Armistice and also spoke in reference to "the glorious dead." The Ensign pointed out that it was the duty of us and our children to see that we did not break faith with those who were left in Flanders Fields. He also honoured the fallen of the Salvation Army, who had given their all to make the world safe for democracy.

Sergeant-Major William Hart offered a special prayer for the loved ones, whose boys did not come home, during which the returned men present, stood. During the service Bandsman George Wardle sounded the Last Post, while all present stood at attention. This effect was deeply felt by those present.

The band played special music arranged for the service and the meeting was brought to a close with the band playing the Chopin Funeral March in honour of the glorious dead.

The honour roll of the local Salvation Army was solemnly draped with flowers, and there were two rifles on each side, with fixed bayonets, only added to the reverence of the occasion.

The service was one of the largest attended, of its kind, ever to be held in the local Army Citadel, and its impression left with those present will long be remembered and the message conveyed those who were present as an inspiration for some time to come, as the spirit of sacrifice was solemnly engraved on the hearts of all present.

Napoleon was 27 when he was given command of the army of Italy and 36 when he crowned him self emperor of France.

CONTEMPLATED ADDITIONS AT O. S. D.

The attention which the Department of Education is giving to the modernization of the curriculum of the schools is one of the most healthy signs of the time. There is no excuse for a child growing up unfitted to take whatever place he or she ought to fill in life. The Department is laying before him or her every advantage that a child requires.

These advantages are spread before those equipped with the normal faculties of a child but they are not limited to these. One has but to look over the work which is being accomplished at the Ontario School for the Deaf to realize the application that those who lack hearing and hence largely the gift of speech are not to be left handicapped in the competition of life.

The Ontario School for the Deaf, the provincial institution which looks after the educational welfare of the deaf, was a few years ago provided with new dormitories and with a new main building, the pride of the province, public buildings, and not only for the buildings but for the work which is being accomplished within these walls by the adoption of the most uptodate methods in training.

But the last word in both of these has not been said. Announcement is made today indicates a great future in store for this school. One quarter of a million dollars will be spent on new and additions to the school, these to include three buildings, one a vocational educational training building and the third a unit in the educational curriculum of the present day and age. The projected construction which is expected to go forward during this winter will provide additional accommodation for about two hundred students. Overcrowding is one of the drawbacks of the present school.

This is good news for the deaf of Ontario and also for Belleville which has always taken a deep interest in the work of the school because of its association with this city since its foundation. Incidentally the grounds will be the object of a beautification of unemployed labor to a considerable degree.

Much interest will focus on the work of the vocational department which is to be added. There has been a handicap for this branch of training has had to be carried on under conditions largely the same as in the old school. But with modern buildings and equipment the school will be able to provide the most thorough training in mechanics and allied vocational studies. Deaf students have a particular aptitude for the mechanical arts and these offer the students one of the best opportunities for making their way in life.

Superintendent H. B. Fetterly has been tireless in his efforts to make the education of the deaf in this province as perfect as it is possible. What he has already accomplished is well known. But he is not yet satisfied and is continuing his efforts towards the expansion and betterment of the institution.

EXERTING AN INFLUENCE

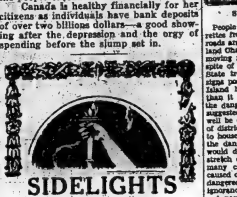
Canadians are fortunate this year in having come to this country the best companies of actors on the British stage. Conditions have made it such that these British companies have to offer Canadians the best in Continental dramatic art.

Canadians are responding to the appeal of great drama as exemplified by the enthusiasm of the audiences in the larger cities to which the companies come.

Every Canadian feels that while there ought to be a healthy new world flavor in the Canadian spirit, it ought to have a base in the best traditions of the race known as British. The art of the drama is vital in its contact with life and moulds the thought of the people and there is no better influence to have working upon our people than that of British dramatic thinkers and actors, for out of these plays there exists the pure serene of British ideals of life.

So far this development of the movement drama-ward has been restricted to the larger cities where there are still show-houses where drama can be played. But if it has vitality and it evidently has, this will spread to the smaller centres and gradually permeate the entire nation.

These British companies are rendering a fine service to Canadians in giving them a measure of what great art is. The study of life ideally or of life as it appeals to the British mind. Canadians could have no higher ideal than to have the British spirit exert the most powerful influence upon our mentality.



SUPPORTING THE LOAN

Canadians are to be called upon to support a loan shorty, which everyone of means should support for this is a testing time, not only in Canadian economic life, but also throughout the world.

One of the results of this will be a greater freedom of movement of money and the increased confidence which this will bring. Among the obligations facing the Dominion today is the providing of employment for the jobless and this has to be met by the issue of bonds, purchased by money of Canadians.

The national credit will be greatly assisted by the wholehearted interest of the people of Canada in the loan.

Canada is healthy financially for her citizens as individuals have bank deposits of over two billions dollars—a good showing after the depression and the orgy of spending before the slump set in.

FOR REMEMBRANCE

By Aline Michaelis

Space has not, bereft me,
Still am I near you,
These are what she left me
For remembrance dear:
All the lilting measures
That the linnet knows,
Sunset's opal treasures,
Petals of the rose,
Poppies' satin dresses,
Stargleams through the night,
And the swift caresses
Of the wind in flight.

Thieving time can never
Steal her quite away.
Since with dawning ever
Memories sweet and gay
Wake me from my sleeping.
From my dreams of her,
Thoughts live unbegun creeping.
Glad as wings astir.
Space has not bereft me.
Nor has time, with wing;
Memories she has left me
In all lovely things.

SIDELIGHT READER concurs with what has been said in this column about the young Britishers who are being chased hither and yon over Canada looking for work which does not seem to be available. Belleville citizens are going to put up ten thousand dollars to help the jobless of the city over the winter. The Federal and Provincial Governments contribute twenty thousand dollars, making thirty thousand dollars in all for relief in Belleville this winter. Sidelight Reader says that as the government is responsible for the plight of these young Britishers in a measure, and have a stake of twenty thousand dollars in the Belleville relief project, that it would not be amiss for the governments to ask that the stranger within our gates get a square deal, a square deal that he is not getting at present and that he was after one meal and a shakedown. Some method should be devised for caring for these young Britishers other than the workings of good Canadians. Chief of Police Kidd who is in close and intimate touch with the young out-of-work says he knows that the young Britishers referred to are a fine lot of lads with great possibilities for becoming good Canadians, but constant association with professional hoboes, gaycats and all sort of floating riff-raff will bring them down to the level of the "I-Won't-Works" in time. Too bad such fine material is going to waste for lack of a little care, sympathy and protection. What's to be done about it?

Other Papers' Opinions

SPREADING FIRES

People who throw lighted cigarettes from automobiles on highway roads are described by the Long Island Chamber of Commerce as "the moving menace in motor cars." In spite of the carnival which the state invites, and the numerous signs posted along the roads, Long Island had four times more fires than it likes. At this time of year the danger increases and the rules suggested for that locality might well be applied elsewhere. Residents of districts where woods come close to houses are keenly aware of both the danger and the rules. No one would deliberately set fire to a stretch of woodland but there are many careless smokers who have caused disastrous conflagrations by dangered human life through their ignorance or thoughtlessness.

A partly smoked cigarette of one of the popular brands will burn for not until it is completely consumed. It is made to keep its light, as many a housewife has discovered on finding a hole burned in the rug or a scar on polished furniture. Any smoker would realize if he thought about it that the upward current by the fire's roadside will keep on burning quite as persistently as the one which lights the ash tray at the edge of the piano. Dry leaves and grass catch readily, and the tiny blaze has started spreads rapidly through the brush and timber in many parts of Long Island. If it is not put out by near-by residents or a by some watchful troopers, it is likely to burn its way to the coast and develop into a conflagration.

Picnic parties with their campfires have been responsible for many the stone outdoor fireplaces provided in many parts of Long Island have impressed them with the importance of safe methods of fire under control. Few picnickers nowadays still leave it unwatched or go home when embers are still burning. However, the weather is too cool now for any but the hardiest to open door dinners, and the carpet of dry leaves is also no longer inviting campfires. The chief hazard is the motorist, but he should remember that every cigarette thrown unextinguished is a fire risk and means a forest fire. More roads should be posted with notices of the dangers from such carelessness.—New York Times.

THE CEMETERY ACT

Dr. Kaiser has good reason to be well satisfied with the effect of Ontario's new Cemetery Act as at last in operation. For many long years, he has been a leading spirit in a movement to have cemeteries cared for properly. He has urged and agitated in favor of some system of proper supervision and beautification being undertaken at all cemeteries to prevent the last bones of the grand old pioneers.

The Act as finally has been made operative is intended to accomplish all that Dr. Kaiser and his colleagues have been fighting for during these years. It aims at clean-up, that is, the tidying of grounds, and their maintenance in reasonably good and presentable condition. This is the least that can be done for the last resting places of these who lie in them.

It is to be hoped, Dr. Kaiser suggested in an interview with the Times, that the Act will be carried out with sympathy and discretion. It is easy for parliament and legislatures to put down on the statute books—but there are many occasions on which such laws are observed as they ought to be. In this case, however, the people of Ontario will have to see that it is effectively carried out. To Dr. Kaiser and his colleagues belongs the credit of the thanks of all those who are interested in the preservation of old burial grounds in a state befitting the character of such places, and these thanks might well take the form of a public duty to insist on carry out the law.—Ottawa Times.

CHEESE HOLDING UP

Someone not long ago declared the cheese industry had been parish ridden. A Hastings report to the Ontario department of agriculture says "the production of cheese is holding up rather better than last year; 1930 were marketed over the Belleville cheese board as against 1,-000,000 lbs. for a more than last year." Prudence rejects these factories "sell more cheese every day," and Gilmpany announces that "the cold locally this week at 11 3-4c". Exports to Britain for the season so far are reported to be 45,616 boxes, as against 42,824 at the same time last year.—Woodstock Sentinel Review.

STABLE GOVERNMENT

The good effects of a stable Government in Great Britain are already being felt. International confidence has improved. Domestic industry is gathering speed. Unemployment is falling. There ought to be nothing to hinder the British people from plodding their way up the hill to as much as their old eminence as can be won in a changed world. They have the dogged spirit. They have the unconquerable courage. They can have all they need from the spirit of cooperation of a growing and progressive Empire.—

FACULTY OF HEARING

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D.

Most people pay at least some attention to the care of their eyes but they hardly realize that the ability to ears until hearing is interfered with and then, unfortunately, it may be too late.

Yet, the faculty of hearing is one of the real marvels of nature. The ear, in fact, is more accurate in its sense of perception than is the eye, for sounds we hear, but we only speak. Visual mistakes, however, are common. Furthermore, no organ of the human body is such a blessing as does the ear. The sound waves of the world's noise, the familiar intonations emanating from the lips of our beloved ones and from our friends, music and its ability to stir us to our very depths — these are but a few of life's values dependent wholly upon the faculty of hearing.

The auditory apparatus really consists of the ear drum. The first is the external ear, the second the middle ear, the third the internal ear, and the fourth the auditory nerve.

The external ear is more than that fleshy, outside portion which we can see at the sides of the head and which catches sound. With the external ear is included also the so-called external auditory canal, something like a tube, which leads in.

This auditory canal is about an inch long and has glands which secrete wax. Right at the end of the canal is the membrane which separates the external ear from the middle ear. The latter is lined with a few hairs together with a certain variety of cells which secrete a salt oral in number, secrete a pasty, yellowish substance, known as ear wax. Both the hairs and the wax are protective agents which help to prevent insects and foreign bodies of all kinds from lodging in the canal. Ear wax is found in every ear and even with careful cleansing it may be found in the canal. Occasionally and actually interfere with hearing. Such conditions should always be left to suit an eye specialist because of this fact.

The middle ear is an irregular box-like space which stands a most remarkable relation to the ear wax. These bones transmit sound waves from the tympanic membrane to the internal ear. From the internal ear nerves go to the brain proper.

The structure of the internal ear is exceedingly complicated. Suffice it to say that there are many spiral tubes and canals situated one above of which contain liquid and are connected with nerves which lead to the brain.

The important structure to remember is the eustachian tube or canal. This leads from the middle ear to the pharynx. The object of this tube is to maintain equality of the ear and the mouth is to establish equal air pressure inside and outside the ear drum. The eustachian tube, however, may form a passageway for bacteria and germs which may be the causing sometimes serious ear disease.

Inflammatory conditions of a catarrhal nature may be ushered in and gradual in development and cause permanent damage to the ear drum. Sometimes it is necessary to medically and at once.

Therefore, the condition should likewise never be neglected. In all such cases careful examination of the throat and nose is indicated. And if there is any doubt whatever, remember that his hearing may be seriously impaired.

Lastly never pick the ears with hair pins, etc. Always be careful in cleansing the ears not to use towel or wash-cloth. Let the deeper parts go for the time being.

DR. BISCH'S DAILY HEALTH HINT

If an infant persistently refuses food it is well to examine the mouth to see if it is inflamed in any way. The food itself should also be examined to determine if it is proper for digestion.

ST. LUKE'S SUMMER

Thou magic dream of the world,
Whose trunk is dipped in red and gold—
St. Luke, whose later summer
Is kingly,
A wealth of mellow garnerings—

Thy hand is on the woods, and in,
With stain of fruit and leaf they turn
Thy touch is on the hills; they burn
With yellowed furze and crimson-ing fern

And if the shrouding mists ascend
From flats where waters wend,
They change at thy transfiguring
To spirit-bands that stand and sing.

Rye Only Grain to Sell Higher Than Year Ago

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—Rye bread, the staff of life of many a sandwich, may be a scarce article this winter.

Long regarded "a poor relation" of wheat as a bread grain because of the disparity in the size of the crops, rye has gone quietly along the way, until now it is the only grain selling at a price higher than that of a year ago.

Rye closed Saturday at 54 to 55 cents a bushel as compared with 48 and 50 cents a year ago.

SUBURBAN PROBLEM

Dear Sir,—I noticed on reading your paper Saturday night that Major Reid stated emphatically there would be no relief for outside persons and that the relief project was Belleville Relief for Belleville Citizens. Now in my humble opinion Reid is cutting it a little too fine for if Mayor Reid and the Relief Committee stop to think for one moment they would find that Belleville depends on her very existence on what they call outsiders. They have only to take the following Industries: Point Anne, Cement Works; the Alemite; the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Industrial Company and they will find they are located in the Township of Thurlow and not in Belleville as many people think. Now the wages of the money earned in these industries finds its way to the merchants of Belleville. Now I wonder what Mayor Reid would think if the employees of the above industries retaliated and gave their wages to merchants that for the future Thurlow's work would be for residents of Thurlow and Belleville citizens to find work in Belleville.

Trusting you will allow space in your valuable paper for this letter.

EDISON GIFTS IN MONTREAL

Were Possessions of Mrs. Hayler Reed of That City

Montreal, Que (By The Canadian Press)—Some treasured possessions, gifts of the late Thomas Alva Edison to a young Canadian girl, are now in the hands of her second husband, Hayler Reed of this city. Among them are the personal letters from the inventor himself, in his firm and characteristic hand, and one of his original talking machines manufactured for sale.

The late Mrs. Hayler Reed, whose first husband was Grosvenor P. Lowrey, associate and friend of Edison, was Miss Armour, the daughter of a well known and noted for her talented work in interior decoration in many hotels operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which Mr. Reed was an official the paid many visits to the Edison laboratories at Menlo Park.

Grosvenor P. Lowrey, Mrs. Reed's first husband, lawyer and friend of Edison, became an enthusiastic about the young inventor's phenomenal genius that he was able to inspire the great financiers of that time with his own faith in such an extent that they were willing to finance his researches into incandescent lighting.

The usually large investment required for the company, the Edison Electric Light Company, which amounted to enormous sums, men of big industries of the day. But Mr. Lowrey's faith in Edison and his associates' trust in his judgment were fully justified. Year later, has just three days, on October 21, 1879, the first successful Edison lamp was made.

Throughout these days, the late Mrs. Reed, (then Miss Armour) continued to pay visits to Edison, "the WIFE: "Well, what are you laughing at? Thinking of all the time you've been wasting with that line?"

HUBBY: "No, m'dear; it but I struck me that the fish I just missed probably swam home and lit out about the size of the bait he lost."

wizard of Menlo Park". Edison at one time laughingly proposed "taking in her into partnership." It was no mean tribute to her intelligence when William Meadowcroft, the inventor's right-hand man, wrote to Miss Armour: "I never heard him refer to any woman a second time, but he has been making all about you."

These letters of Edison's addressed to Miss Armour are now in possession of Hayler Reed, her second husband, who also treasures one of the pioneer phonographs turned out by the inventor, which still functions. They are no less valued by Mr. Lowrey's son, John D. Lowrey of Utica, and his step-brother, Gordon Reed.

With the passing of the great inventor and of Mrs. Reed, the phonograph and letters will perpetuate the belief in Edison by a Canadian girl and her husband at a time when all others but his immediate associates predicted failure for his enterprise.

BALMY BREEZES WAFT ONTARIO

Winterless Winter May Be Ahead Citizens of Province

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 9 (CP)—While balmy breezes waft across Ontario, and seem as giving a new lease of life and restoring some of the faded glories of summer, Sunshine and zephyrs more suitable to spring than late Fall have made citizens of the province wonder if a winterless Winter is ahead while the comeback staged by fruit and flowers has encouraged many in the belief that the end will be mild.

Roses are blooming in many parts of the province. They have been reported from Milton, St. Catharines and Cannington. Strawberries have appeared again on the Brantford market. Sault Ste. Marie boasted a temperature of 70 degrees yesterday and reported butterflies and birds still about.

A cold spell temporarily checked the balmy Autumn weather last week but has disappeared as rapidly.

OUTLAWS of EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

Brainerd, remembering his recent experience with Tichenor, needed no urging to enlist. In Babson's car, within two hours he was back in Babson's office with a copy of his editorial. "That's certainly a rousing editorial," Babson complimented him. "I don't suppose it'll do more punch to it if you tied into Nate Tichenor more vigorously?"

"What Tichenor hasn't done anything out of the way, has he?"

"He's swiped our water, hasn't he — or he's trying to swipe it?"

"He's perfectly within his rights, Mr. Babson. How did he know he uncorked the water?"

"The rights of the people are paramount to those of the individual, no matter whether they are or not it suits me to have you do so," Impudent fellow. Attack him. Impugn things to him. Run a history of his family and the Kershaws — continued from week to week. I want to bustle the enterprising rascal. Him! This is a war we're about to engage in, Joe, and in war you've got to make people hate or they won't fight well. We'll have to fight for the Eden Valley water, but we can win, although to do so we shall have to hold Church Creek and the Bar H in order to acquire Tiger water rights. But if we tackle the owners now — hold them up to obloquy and ridicule and public hate, they just can't live in this country, understand, and they'll be glad to sell and get out."

Brainerd replied: "Mr. Babson, it's a job I don't like—for two reasons. One—business; the other—ethical."

"Bear in mind, Joe, that the continued prosperity of Forlorn Valley is a matter of profound interest to you and me."

"I'm on the horns of a dilemma, Mr. Babson. If I attack Tichenor in the manner you suggest, he will call my opposition rival paper in this town and ruin me."

"How can he? He can't get any local advertising. I'd see to that, even if the local people were fools enough to support their natural enemy by giving him advertising."

"But he promised me he'd do it, Mr. Babson."

"A mere bluff."

"I think you've got that man wrong. I need him as one need, and will go through. I understand now why his people have stuck to him — why they didn't keep. Bad as he is, he's a man of his promises. If they were and had the courage, they were, both class had the courage of wounded grizzly bears. . . I'm afraid of Nate."

Babson smiled patiently. "Tichenhalers and the Kershaws never had their courage tested outside Eden Valley, Joe. Let Tichenor come projecting around Forlorn Valley and he'll find a man to call his bluff."

"I tell you Mr. Babson, it's no Joe. I do not want Tichenor will fight back—and the only way a man can fight back is to meet force with force. I'm not an opposition newspaper and mail his copies gratis to his enemies. And I tell you further I dislike the fight because it's dirty. I'll fight Tichenor all over the lot for the sake of Forlorn Valley and its varying needs; but I'll fight him on the issue involved and not his family history."

"I see," Babson murmured sadly, "you're an idealist too."

"I hope I haven't — but all my idealism."

"I see. Well, Joe, I hate to remind you of it, but you owe this bank three thousand dollars, and this bank holds a chattel mortgage on your plant. And you haven't got the building you're housed in paid for yet. I hold a deed of trust on that."

"Is that a threat, Mr. Babson?"

"Suppose we call it a gentle hint, Joe."

"Then let's quit arguing. I'll not wage a mean, dirt, personal war against Nathan Tichenor and Kershaw girl. That's final—and I suggest that if and when you get a surface intrusion into Forlorn Valley, you go out to the main canal, jump in and drown yourself."

"Well, that fixes your clock, Brainerd." Babson commenced to rearrange his pens and pencils on their rack and to shuffle the unanswered correspondence on his desk. "I'll just step across to the Valley Centre Register and put in a man who's loyal."

Joe Brainerd stood up. He was a small man, but like most small men he lacked neither bombast nor conceit. He struck silently and savagely—furious blows, left and right, to Babson's sneering face; as the banker sprawled back of the desk the corndam proprietor of Valley Centre's lone palladium of liberty walked out of the bank and back to his office, where he wrote the end of every paper and wrote:

"With this issue the present editor of the Valley Centre Register resigns his swan song. Because he wouldn't take orders from Nathan Babson and do the latter's dirty work for him. The Bank of Forlorn Valley, which holds a chattel mortgage on the Register's plant, but not on the Register's soul, will kick ye sole editor and proprietor out into the gutter, and incorporate at Valley Centre Register, and put in an editor who will lick the hand that feeds him, even if he doesn't relish the dirty diet.

"The editor desires to express his gratitude to the citizens of Forlorn Valley who have so loyally supported him and hisKodakers. Of course we have found it expedient at times to tread on somebody's toes, but we haven't held mean little grudges and when the fight was over we were always willing to shake hands. And we have not always won. Hence, we hope to be forgiven our trespasses as we forgive those who have trespassed against us.

"The editor, eventually, may be forced to buy himself a tin bill and compete with the hawkers on the streets, but never let it be said of him that he existed at the price of another's shame and humiliation in order that ruthless and powerful interests might profit by a personal grouch.

Joseph P. Brainerd,
Sole Editor and Proprietor.

Valley Centre Register.

When Editor Jeremy Kershaw came in for luncheon the next noon, following a hard morning's work in the branding corral, Editor Brainerd's swan song and ensuing editorial promptly came to their attention. Indeed, there was no escaping either, for the latter lay in black brevier type filled the first two editorial columns on the front page and in the centre of the same page, toned and also in brevier, the swan song appeared.

Jerry read the articles first and, without comment handed the paper to Nate. When he had finished reading it he looked up at her whimsically. "How stupid that fellow Babson is," he commented. "He's hog-wild with power. One would think he'd know by now when there's something constructive to be done and when there's the wrong way of doing it. Hurrah for Joe Brainerd!"

"It takes a man to accept ruin rather than orders that conflict with his sense of justice. I wonder what sort of dirty work Babson wanted him to do."

"I don't know, I can't even suspect, but I'm willing to agree with Brainerd, on suspicion, that the work was dirty." He commenced to chuckle with a certain joyous malevolence. "Well, excitement, in line with my policy of becoming the big man of this district and also in line with my promise to make the animal, I believe it is . . . to be a gala for side effect announcement for term of the Valley-Centre Register."

INSTALMENT XVI

About two o'clock that afternoon Nate walked in on Joe Brainerd and solemnly proffered that suffering individual his hand. "Where can we talk privately?" he asked. Brainerd indicated his den. This once sat in at the desk, where he filled in a check to Joseph P. Brainerd and signed it. "You fill in the figures," he said, "and my bank will pay the check."

Brainerd stared at him. "What do I have to do for this?"

"Just continue to fight for the best interests of Forlorn Valley."

"With a mission Tichenor. Who told you that you were the man I was ordered to attack?"

"Why, nobody told me. I didn't even suspect it. I decided to fit behind you merely because you're a man after my own heart."

"Sit down. That's an order, commanded. And he related to Tichenor every detail of his conversation with Babson.

"I could stand up under that bunch's 'teasings, Brainerd." Tichenor told him when the tale was done, "but I shouldn't like to see Miss Kershaw put to that extremity. Well, you can give me your book if you care to, or you may consider this advance as a donation to the cause of good men and true. But I have a request to make of you. The Valley Centre Register is the mouthpiece and the champion of Forlorn Valley and I desire that it continue to be just that. The war for the water is on and it's going to be some war. I ask you, therefore, to print the news from the front honestly and impartially. It may be that from time to time Miss Kershaw and I—and the Mountain Valley Power Company, which is one—will have something to say to your subscribers. If you object to print it——and I'll expect you to print it——and I don't care a fig, books in a hollow how you ridicule or condemn it in your editorial column. That's your privilege."

"There must be something wrong with your head," Brainerd protested. "But what's the trouble in a little it. However, before I fill in the check—and you'll take my gratitude for granted—it is my duty to inform you that Forlorn Valley Centre Reg later is going to operate in red ink. I'll expect you to make good and repay this loan from the profits of your losing enterprise."

"Just make certain you can draw that check out of a safe deposit box see me."

"I have the bank three thousand, and there's a deed of trust on this building for fifteen hundred. I'd like to pay that all up and have a balance for operating capital. But I'll make a one more point you've overlooked. When I bank this check in Forlorn Valley it will be good? I know you're back of me and it will be said that you control me editorially."

"Well, that will be fine. It will automatically prevent you from shooting me any editorial preferment.

"You be mighty careful some-body doesn't kill you off in the shank of your callow youth, my friend. You are romantic, Nate. You with all the acclaim a Roman mob had vent to accord the triumphance of the Christian martyrs to the lions. I want Babson to lead them on to make tools of themselves, so I can show him up here for a false leader.

"Almost everybody here calls the other fellow by his first name. My name's Joe. May I call you Nate?" he said.

"The pleasure is mutual, Joe. You may."

They shook hands. And then Joe's face clouded as the clock struck. "This fine, Nate. It's five minutes of three and I had to get down to the bank and deposit this manna from Heaven. I'll fix your check in for six thousand and he did.

Babson glared at the editor as the latter came into the bank. He said nothing until Brainerd was about to depart.

"Brainerd, this bank doesn't want your business! Close out your account."

"Thanks for the information. I have just deposited Nate Tichenor's check for six thousand dollars. It's on a San Francisco bank, and as soon as it has gone through clearing I'll give you my check for what I owe the bank and then clean the balance right out. I couldn't keep tin money in a bank. I know is going bust."

"Impudent cad! Get out to Tichenor," Babson jerked.

Little Joe Brainerd's face grew red; he swelled like a turkey gobbler. "You insulted me yesterday and I poked you twice for it," he screamed. "Now you've insulted me again and I'm going to clean up on you. Then he leaped in reality, he bounded like a tennis ball, clearing the railing and landing beside Babson's desk.

Henryl Help, help," Babson shrilled to his assistant. "Call Mr. Hooney," he ordered.

His stenographer. Then he went down under the impact of Joe Brainerd's furious onslaught whereupon the editor crawled him and hammered him until his fists hurt him, after which he greeted Babson by the threat and bumped his head against the floor. He was like a desperado of the olden days who, having cleaned out a saloon, could not be happy until he had shot out the lights. He had landed heavily twice on Henry Hooney and when the latter interfered, and when Deputy Sheriff Bill Rooney came puffing into the bank in response to the stenographer's summons, Mr. Rooky was crouching in his locked cage, while the demon editor strove to climb over the street Jore netting to get at him. "Joe, you stop that!" Mr. Rooney commanded, grasped the little madman by the seat of the trousers and jerked him down. "Boy, you ain't acting right."

Observe Babson's wrists of attachment, you fat fool." Brainerd retorted, and pirrented Mr. Rooney with a decortation commonly known as a nicuse on the eye. Out of his good eye Mr. Rooney observed that his quarry was weeping with rage; so he folded Brainerd in his ample abdomen and carried the lunatic out of the bank screaming and kicking, and deposited him in the local bastile.

"It's war," Brainerd screamed, as Rooney turned the key in the lock. Babson accused me of selling out. Babson! Undermine! He said I'd sold out! I'm free! I'm free! Free to—Just watch my editorials. I'll sizzle like a Roman candle. Just watch me. I'm free. I'm free.

He was screeching out on a bourn-ing childishly when Nate:

"Tichenor came over and bailed him out. "That's all right, Joe," he said. "The war is on, Nate, and I've fired the first gun

THE RETURN OF TARZAN, No. 17. (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs.

As the dark waters closed above Tarzan on this same ocean two ships were headed for Africa. One was a French cruiser. On it his friend d'Arnot was an officer. The other, a luxurious private yacht, carried the guests of an English lord, among them the lovely American girl, Jane Porter, and her father.

After Tarzan had sadly kissed her farewell, Jane sailed for England, promising Clayton she would marry him there. On three different occasions in London, she postponed the wedding Then came the invitation to cruise around Africa in the "Lady Alice." She found the idea delightful, as it would again delay her marriage. She had given her word to marry young Clayton, the supposed Lord Greystoke. But it was Tarzan, the real heir to that title, who still had her love. So it happened that, as the trim white yacht sailed south, a young woman sat surrounded by every luxury, gazing with sad eyes upon a diamond-studded locket.

Her heart and thoughts were far away in a leafy jungle, wondering if the man who had given her the beautiful jewel was back in his savage forest. And as the dainty craft glided so gracefully through the gentle swell, Jane could not know that at Tarzan was struggling for life in these same seas, far to the east.

Reid was present to bid the boys good-bye and in addressing them the Mayor reminded them that they are going to help in the construction of a great and important work—a work which they will remember with pride having been engaged in. You are going to a good camp and you will be well looked after. "You will be Belleville boys where you are going just as much as you are here," said the Mayor, "you are all good men and we want you back. I wish you God speed and a safe journey."

In a short talk to the men Major Green said: "Boys, you are about to leave for the north, you have been picked men you will merit credit to yourselves. and the city you represent, because here in mind everybody here has tried to help you and have been given a square deal, and I feel your luck has changed, because in camp you will be experienced builders, ready to 'tackle the esplanade' in earnest. I wish you a safe trip, good-bye, and good luck."

Alderman MacMillan arrived just before the party left and had a few words with the boys wishing them a safe journey and good luck.

Through the kindness of the management of the Rawson bus line the men were conveyed to the North station of the Canadian National Railways in two street buses. Mr. Rawson's kind consideration was very much appreciated by Major Green and the men. Mr. J. H. Bentley, of the Bentley Taxi Service also offered to furnish two cars for this purpose, but this was not required.

The men referred to the kindness of the Y.M.C.A. in placing the communal room of the association at their disposal in preparation for leaving on the journey and pointed that their thanks be conveyed to the officers of the association.

The men were advised that the management of the Ontario Intelligencer would send to their camp copies at the paper daily, so that they would be able to keep in touch with the happenings in the "old home town." This information was received with much satisfaction by the men.

Major Green, who accompanied the party to Toronto, expected to be up ten men at Port Hope, who were selected from that town to go on the work.

Good Things You Can Make With Apples

By Hannah Wing

Although the flavor varies in different varieties of apples, it is in general milked and usually tart, and is best with foods which do not have a strong flavor of their own which would conflict with or hide that of the apple. With these points in mind the housekeeper can frequently substitute apples in recipes calling for other foods.

Apple Muffins

2 cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder,
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1 cup milk
1 egg
4 tablespoons melted fat
Cooked and sweetened apple sauce.

Sift the dry ingredients. Add the milk and beaten egg and mix well. To this add the melted fat. Drop a spoonful of the mixture in greased muffin tins. Add 1 tablespoon apple sauce and cover the sauce with the muffin mixture. Bake from 20 to 30 minutes in a moderately hot oven. This recipe makes one dozen muffins.

Apple Breakfast Cake

1 1-2 cup lukewarm water
1 cake compressed yeast
1-4 cup sugar
1 1-2 teaspoon salt
3 1-2 cups flour
3 tablespoons melted fat.

Dissolve the yeast in the tepid water. Add the salt, sugar, ingredients, and to yeast and water, making well. Add the fat and beat thoroughly.

Let the mixture in a warm place to rise and when it has doubled in bulk stir well and turn into a shallow greased baking tin. Spread dough evenly over the pan. Cover the top with good tart cooking apples sliced thin. When dough has doubled its bulk bake in a moderate oven (350-400) for 45 minutes. About 15 minutes before it is done remove the cake from the oven and pour over it a syrup made by combining 1 cup brown sugar, 1-2 cup water, 2 tablespoons butter, 1-4 teaspoon nutmeg, and boiling 3 minutes. Return the cake to the oven to finish baking. Serve hot.

This cake may be baked the day before using and heated by sprinkling lightly with water and covering the pan it is in with another pan before it is put in the oven. Allow 30 minutes for re-heating.

Hot Apple Sandwich

Cover a slice of toasted bread with a thick layer of heavy apple sauce. Place two slices of bacon on top of the sauce and put in hot oven until bacon is crisp. Serve at once.

Apple Croquette

1 cup boiled rice
1-2 cup thick tart apple sauce
Salt
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Grating of lemon peel.
1 teaspoon butter

Mix well. When cold, shape into croquettes. Roll in crumbs and saute in butter. Turn in deep fat and drain on soft paper. Serve with cheese sauce.

The Old Story of Three Meals a Day

By Hannah Wing

Since no single phase of housekeeping takes as much time as food preparation, every home-maker or will welcome any method to the time and energy spent. While each must work out for herself such rules as will govern her household, there are some general rules which apply to every one.

Good managers in the home plan their meals ahead. While some do not put their menus in writing, they at least have a definite plan. One home-maker says she likes to write her down as it will not be as likely to forget them. Each menu has a card of its own, and when the meal has been served, she places the card in a manilla file. The next time she gains many ideas by referring to her old menu cards when formulating plans for meals.

If one has a plan, it is easy to prepare enough of a food at one time for two meals; but it is wise to have only leftovers of which we are sure we can make definite use. For instance when cooking carrots for Monday's dinner, sufficient can be prepared for a scallop dish for Tuesday's supper or lunch. Enough cooked custard may be made for two meals, to be used in floating island the first day, and the next day the remainder may be poured over left-over plain cake or fruit.

It is a great time-saver to keep supplies on hand. Every kitchen should have a pad and pencil in a convenient place, upon which needed supplies may be listed. Whenever a can or other article of food has been consumed, a note should be made of it, and this article included in the next order.

Gelatin desserts and salads are always convenient for Sunday or company meals because they can be prepared ahead. When making gelatin dishes the process may be hastened if a small amount of water is added to the gelatin and the mixture melted over hot water. This may then be combined with the remainder of the liquid unheated, and congealing takes place quickly. When the dish is to be served hold the mold in hot water for a second or two to soften. Then turn upon a platter which is wet. It may then be moved with ease if the dish is the centre. Crumbs kept on hand may be used in many ways. Dry the bread and grind several weeks' supply at one time. Before serving cucumbers put a paper bag over the entire platter, shaking it on from the top toward the handle. The crumbs will be caught in this bag and will be lost on the table or floor. If crumbs are not available, butter an extra slice of bread and cut and put on top of scalloped dishes instead of putting them into the oven. Buttered toast may also be cubed and used for this purpose.

UNSATISFIED YEARNING
Down in the silken hallway
Scampers the dog about,
And whines, and barks, and scratches,
In order to get out.
Once in the glittering starlight
He straightway doth begin
To set up a doleful howling
In order to get in.

Child Who is Always Angry

By Constance Cameron

When I speak of the child who is always angry, in this particular article, I don't mean for a moment the child who flares up on the right occasion with a spurt of anger or temper. That is quite a natural and distressing safety valve and its significance is entirely different from that of the child who never plays happily with his companions but who is always "getting mad and going home."

Sometimes a personal memory serves to enlighten one on this type of problem. Recently I told that as a child I never started the whole allotted time to play, but always took my dolls and went home the moment I couldn't be the "mother" and playing house, or the leader in our other games. That confession was greeted with the reply, "I can't imagine it."

I can explain just why I, too, was the type of unfortunate child who is always "mad" about something.

Adler puts it very neatly into words: "An angry child is striving for recognition" and, as I look back, I know that was exactly what I was doing, and what every child who is prone to "get mad" is constantly doing. A cheerful and magnanimous when I was directing the fun, but to take orders from another child to me is intolerable and unnoticed — tell—that was the time to pick a quarrel and stalk home in high indignation. You see, I'd be noticed at the moment of my exit, anyway, and that was evidently some slight consolation to me.

But this type of child is unhappy and we cannot but try to overcome this false notion of gaining attention. If your child is falling into this habit, make it a point to let him do something when his playmates are present in which he can excel.

Then, and most important, impress upon him the fact that the truly big person always steps aside without losing any prestige to let the other fellow "do his stuff." Satisfy the craving for social significance—for we carry it through life in various forms—and make the child establish his place, his mates' respect, by going about it which really requires skill, or patience, or effort; not by using anger for such a purpose.

Avoid Idea of "Luck"

By Constance Cameron

It is only natural that we try to make the paths of little folks' smoother and easier. I think all who love children with that they might tak all the hurts than the child, yet in attempting to assuage one childish disappointment, one childish failure, I think we often pave the way for more, and for emotional maladjustments toward life and fate in general.

The little boy was sobbing bitterly because his new ball had bounded into the street and been run over by a passing car. It was but natural that the mother should try to console him and dry his tears. But she introduced an element that the child will try to use as skill from now on whenever his carelessness causes similar situations. "Never mind sonny we'll get you another ball." That was just bad luck."

For consolation doesn't sound so very ominous on the surface, yet from around us to the man; adults who blame "luck" for failures, for disappointments which are entirely of their own fashioning! No, I should never start a child believing in "luck."

Personally the only luck I believe in is the luck we make of what we think and do each day of our lives! The good luck which comes to you today is but the result of the days, and months, and years of stirring and effort which have preceded today.

It would have been much more helpful, more fair to the little boy, had the fact that his own poor ball is destroyed. Next time, say with it the lesson is learned, he can't bounce into the street."

Wouldn't that have opened up a constructive way of playing with fate? Not a sound day of thought regarding any toy he might possess!

But what did the mother instill in the boys mind? Merely that he was a victim of the prank of fate—"luck" she called it, rather apart from himself, something which could be blamed for his subsequent lesser disappointments. The moment we begin with an outside influence to shift our failures, we are starting a habit of mind which is thick with more failures and foggy with unhappiness.

Fate is a blame where it belongs, and withhold as you would poison from your child, that idea. Then there is such a thing as good or bad "luck" which separates winning, his volition either for or against him.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. At a theatre party should the host open the gifts and show them to the guests?

2. What is the correct form to use to thank the giver when opening each gift?

3. Is it proper to take to opera or theatre, a box of candy, theatre or regular theatre?

R.M.

1. If the host is the one whose birthday is being celebrated, open each gift and say something appropriate and gracious about each gift.

2. "How very kind you were to think of me," "How happy I am to own such a handsome tie—I'll wear it with pride," "You were so much, Jack." Or, "What a friend you are—always making me so happy. And how did you know that I was hoping for a new bag? It's a beauty, and you are most kind to give it to me." Or, "I guess this is my birthday—with such such friends as you are to think of me with such lovely gifts. What a glorious evening! Muffles—Oh, I'm overcome with joy."

In other words just as in the ideal thankful way in the reception of gifts should register two things by his behavior, kind and thought, the generosity, of the giver, and then the expression of appreciation by the recipient. Any gracious comments that show the giver that the recipient is really appreciating the points that the giver was trying to express would be appreciated.

3. Not only proper, lady, but it should be compulsory. And if we don't take off our hats, we will be guilty of annoying the people sitting behind us, a request that probably won't be any too gracious. Unselfishness is at the root of good manners, and it just isn't unselfish when we keep on our hats and thus obstruct the view of people behind us.

Correct Invitation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me the correct way for a man to ask a lady to go to the theatre with him? Would it be correct to ask, "How would you like to go to a show with me?" or "Would you like to go to a show with me?"

Also how should he ask her to go to church or dance?

William.

Perhaps it would be best to make the invitation more direct and definite, by adding the time and the name of the play. For instance, "Would you like to go with me to see 'Hamlet' next Tuesday evening? It is playing at the Shakespeare theatre." There is a dance at Happiness Hall on next Saturday evening. Would you enjoy going?" Or, "Would you care to go to church with me next Sunday morning? The United Church, if you wish, or any other that you prefer?"

And I am sure that the lady would be very happy to accompany you on any of these occasions.

Fashion Flashes

Be bright in a gay tweed suit. Here the model is a broken check design in bottle green, rose and beige. The short box-coat is lined with the rose crepe de chine, pockets are piped with orange and closed with a light amber button. The blouse is a tucked model in orange and beige crepe de chine.

A faithful friend is the frock of black satin for informal events at evening. A new model is cut on cheath lines and is worn with a little coat that ties at the side tightly moulding the hips. The satin coat has a deep cape of ecru lace.

Eyelets still ree much that is going on since many of the new accessories use eyelets and perforations. A new formal afternoon glove of beige suede has ruffled brown suede gauntlets, eyelet embroidered. There is a three-tier brown and beige bag to match also with eyelets.

It's very easy to keep warm when we wear the new white kid gauntlets with a half-cuff of black sealskin. It is applied step-fashion and there is black sealskin.

Curves are in many of the new hats. A new model, in black velvet, curves over each ear and then scallops over the top. At the side is a pert little white galyak bow.

Be careful how you use feathers on your hats; better too little than too much. A lovely hat in pale grey felt is trimmed, not with ostrich feathers, but with delicate fronds of white marabou edged with black.

It is unlucky to dream you are going to jail and have it come true.

FRIDAY WEDDING SUPERSTITION HIT

MINNEAPOLIS — Besides preventing hasty marriages, Minneapolis fire-day marriage law is claimed by its proponents to have eliminated an old superstition — Friday marriages. The law, similar to those on the statute books of several other states, requires five days' notice before the issuance of a marriage license.

Sunday is five days before Friday and notices are not acceptable on the Sabbath, and so nearly all weddings are postponed for other days in the week.

Occasionally couples contemplating superstition post their notice on Saturday and deliberately arrange for their ceremony on the following Friday.

INCREASE IN CLOVER, GRASS PRODUCTION

Markets Service Branch Shows Value of Industry

NO ESTIMATE

800,000 Pounds of Blue Grass See n Ontario

Ottawa, Ont. (By The Canadian Press)—The official report on clover and grass seed production throughout Canada prepared by the Markets Service of the Dominion Seed Branch indicates substantial gains in most varieties, and provides an interesting picture of the rapidly growing importance of seed production as an industry in the Dominion.

While much of the crop rei to be threshed, red clover seed production is much larger than for a number of years, and the total yield may exceed 4,000,000 lbs. Major increase in production is reported from Eastern Ontario and Quebec. Ontario production will total at least 1,500,000 lbs., east of Toronto including the Ottawa Valley; about 1,000,000 lbs., in central and southeastern Ontario; 75,000 lbs., west of Fort William, and a substantial quantity in the Verner district on the South line. Some 200,000 lbs., is in sight in Quebec and some 125,000 lbs., is reported from the Sumas areas in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia.

The production of Alsike seed, which comes largely from Ontario, is estimated at 3,600,000 lbs., some 900,000 lbs., below last year; while a small additional amount is reported from the Lake Sumas area in B. C.

A total yield of approximately 4,000,000 lbs., or Alsike seed is in sight, and this is much larger than usual. Ontario is the principal producer, although Alberta growers are contributing some 350,000 lbs., to the Dominion total. The general quality of this year's crop is reported to be good.

No attemp, has been made to estimate the total of sweet clover seed production, which comes largely from the Prairie Provinces, but central and southwestern Ontario may show 1,000,000 lbs., while the crop in Eastern Ontario is said to be considerably small. Manitoba production has been normally large, while some 400,000 lbs., are exported from Saskatchewan, and some 575,000 lbs., from Alberta. General quality is reported to be good.

The general production of Timothy seed throughout Canada of 1931 is believed to be slightly ahead of last year. While drought affected production in southern Ontario increases are reported from Prince Edward Island, Quebec, and British Columbia. Reports indicated supplies of 300,000 lbs., in P. E. Island; 300,000 lbs., in Quebec; 250,000 lbs., in Ontario; 250,000 lbs., in Alberta and 250,000 lbs., in British Columbia.

Reports indicate supplies of 150,000 lbs., of Western Rye Grass seed in central and northern Saskatchewan, with an additional 50,000 lbs., from Alberta. Brome Grass seed is estimated at 25,000 lbs., from Manitoba; 550,000 lbs., from Saskatchewan, and 35,000 lbs., from Alberta.

Production of Canadian Blue Grass seed in Ontario at 200,000 lbs., is only about 50 percent of the 1930 crop, and the production of Brat Grass seed in the Maritimes, principally Prince Edward Island shows a similar decrease.

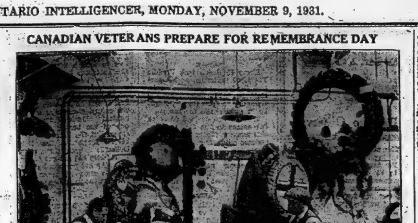
BOOK WEEK'S SUCCESS DUE TO CRITICISM

Justice Surveyer Points Out Flaws in Criticisms

WHOSE INVENTION?



Montreal, Que.—(By The Canadian Press)—Speaking on behalf of the Canadian Authors' Association, Mr. Justice E. Fabre Surveyer addressed members of the Kiwanis Club of Montreal recently. Taking as his subject, "Book Week," the judge indicated to the members that the idea of devoting one week in the year to the diffusion of a particular idea, or of a peculiar article of consumption, originated during the war.

"While the other weeks," said Justice Surveyer, "which nobody seriously criticizes, died a natural death, music week and especially boot week, gave birth several to their very critics. The fact that most of those critics are found among writers—the writer of to-day is the author of to-morrow—made it important upon the parents of the idea not to allow it to sink into oblivion.

"One of the criticisms is that Book Week is usually too commercial a week. One thing is certain, and that is that if it is not the booksellers' invention, if I am not mistaken, the father of the idea is John Murray Gibbon, and I am sure his first thought was not for the bookseller. True, the bookseller finds his profit in the idea. That the bookseller, and possibly the printer, will benefit by the success of Book Week is a matter which cannot be denied. But behind them, back of them, in the author, the inventor, the man or woman who, whatever his or her ability may be, has spent valuable time in producing a book, and who only asks from the book the just and fair trial," the speaker said.

"The success of Book Week has inspired the idea of a Canadian book exhibit at the Canadian National Exhibition. Mrs. E. L. Weller, of Toronto, is my authority for the statement that this exhibition is gradually awakening more and more interest. If, instead of adopting the means resorted to, the authors were inflicting their praises upon unwilling ears by means of the radio," Mr. Justice Surveyer concluded, "the criticisms might be founded. But, so far, the reviews have been carried on with such restraint, that no criticism can stand the test of experience. Truings as exaggerated eulogies."

LOSES COW THRU PRANK

Car Strikes Animal Let Out on Road on Hallowe'en

Prankford (Special)—What is thought to be a Hallowe'en prank resulted in the death of a valuable Holstein cow to Mr. William Nicolson of Prankford. It is thought some of the visitors, for a joke, let the cows out, on the road, and the animal was struck by a passing motorist, sustaining a broken leg and other injuries which necessitated it being destroyed. The animal was of pure bred stock and so quite valuable, and constitutes a serious loss. It seems too bad that these pranks so often lead to serious damage to some one through thoughtlessness and the perpetrators should be made to pay.

It is surely good to hear the different and favorable comments on the agricultural situation emanating from our farmer visitors in town, following the recent rise in grain prices. After the past prolonged period of depression and general of talk failures throughout the district, it is wonderful to see what a difference this small change makes, not in itself alone, of course but in that it marks the change to an upward trend. With eggs soaring upward, grain higher, stock prices looking slightly better, and potatoes also working upwards, the farmer has a sure right to take a more optimistic view, and as the farmer does so do we all.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bowan spent the week end visiting friends and relatives at Oshawa.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Smith of Gilmour were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Williamson.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Thompson of West Huntington were Sunday visitors to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Forsythe.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Burris and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Burris and family of Wellington spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Ross Nicolson.

Girl Guide's Hallowe'en Supper

The supper held by the Prankford Co. of Girl Guides surely proved a success with proceeds amounting to over $30.00 and the company wish to express their thanks for the appreciation shown by a bumper attendance and for the help given them, especially to Mr. W. A. Ketcheson for his store, Messrs Manning, Windover and Bennett for chairs and tables and to the Guides Council for the use of bed and beautiful supply of cooking Many offers of substantial were made by different ladies of the village, testifying to the esteem with which the company is held by the village.

A wonderful improvement is being made on the town-line road from Glen Miller to Trenton limits on the east side of the river. The sides are extended and ditched, the centre is raised and graded, bridges widened and rebuilt. It only remains for Trenton to improve their approaches.

Birthday Anniversary

Friday, October 29th, was the occasion of a very happy birthday celebration at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Ketcheson at Prankford, when Mr. Ketcheson celebrated his 70th birthday. The happy couple were paid a real surprise visit by friends and relatives, including Mr. and Mrs. Harry Whitter and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ketcheson of Trenton; Mr. and Mrs. Mack Maclaren and daughter Ellen of Sidney; Mr. and Mrs. John MacLean of Frankford, and many other friends of the village and vicinity.

Mr. Ketcheson was born in the year 1861 on the oldest Ketcheson farm in Sidney township now occupied by Mr. C. A. Ketcheson, this farm being originally occupied by his great grand-sire who emigrated to Canada from the County of Yorkshire, England. "The Boss", as he is affectionately to his many friends and admirers, still retains all his old-time vigor both physically and mentally, and takes a very large active interest in all municipal and social affairs pertaining to the village. This paper joins with his many friends in wishing Mr. Ketcheson many happy anniversaries of the event.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Bell entertained a number of visitors on Sunday, among whom were Mr. Rogers and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bell of Stirling, Miss Alpha Bell of Oshawa, and Mr. and Mrs. Blake Way and family of Murray.

Mr. and Mrs. Bull of Trenton and Mr. and Mrs. Peter McKee on Sunday.

All signs point to an open winter, at least so Mr. Dame Nature says. He reports finding ripe strawberries this week, and has had a beautiful selection of Roses in full bloom. After all, there are a few bright spots in this cloud of depression, but Mr. Striker is a confirmed optimist anyway, so the warmth of his sunny disposition is probably responsible.

MONTH LONG DAY FORECAST

Father Time Slows Down Days Growing Longer

New York, N.Y.—Father Time, as the ancients call him, will have said, he is slowing down. No two 24-hour days are really of the same time-length.

The day, meaning day and night, is becoming steadily longer and in the year Fifty Thousand Million A. D., what we now call one year will be only about one week. Men and women of fifty will be then classed as 40 days old. Indeed, the length of the month and of a single day will be about the same, each being the equal of what we at present call nearly 47 days.

The basis of such speculation was revealed here before a group of Columbia University scientists by Dr. William de Sitter, world-famous astronomer of Leiden Observatory, Holland, who is on his first visit to the United States. Dr. de Sitter revealed how nature's great clock, our earth, is slowing in its daily rotation and thus changing astronomical time.

The most important theory accounting for the slowing of the earth's rotation is the one first advanced by Jeffreys and Taylor. It is that the earth meets a lot of friction as it turns on its imaginary axis. This friction slows the turning, or rotating motion.

Locals Lost First Grid Game of Season to Peterboro on Saturday by 37-11 Count

Forward Passing By Petes Too Good For Collegiate

HOPE TO WIN

Return Game Will Be Played Wednesday in This City

Before 2,000 rabid hot'ns and howling fans the Belleville Collegiate football team lost their first game of the season to the Peterboro Collegiate Institute by the score of 37 to 11 at James Stevenson Park in Peterboro on Saturday afternoon. The locals did not have a chance to get started following the opening whistle and never had a chance to display their wares, except in the second quarter as they did during the winning of their group.

Petes Smart Team

The Petes presented a smart team of football players and their line of scrimmage is one, that will take considerable beating from any junior team. Jack Armstrong, the years junior sensation with the "Petes" was again in evidence and during the first half he displayed some real classy football in his ball-plunging and long field running. Eric Westbye, the Petes kicking half back also gave the fans many a thrill, when he booted the ball for going time and time again. Frank Jopling in the Petes' line was also a thorn in the locals side all afternoon as his plunging was one of the game's highlights. In all one of the game's smart junior teams the Petes have a smart junior team and it will be a real battle when they come to Belleville next Wednesday afternoon for the return game.

Locals Had no Pep

Belleville, on the other hand did not seem to have the pep that here-to-fore has carried them to victory. On start with Reynolds was unable to get his trusty foot into action, when a kick formation was called. The Belleville line of scrimmage played fair defensive ball will no doubt improve much in the return game. "Hammy" Graves was the outstanding back field player, but the back field in general was outshone by the Belleville line. Rigby, who was a sick boy Weese, Marsden and Morgan all played bang-up football. But with little or no avail, as they were somewhat out weighed by the heavier Peterboro line.

The locals only completed one forward pass all afternoon, while the boosters completed no less than ten. Jimmy Polwell, the former kicking half, was pressed into service and gave a fine account of himself. Coach Shiels feels, that the boys have an excellent chance to overcome the lead and expects a real battle next Wednesday afternoon.

The play opened fast after Belle ville kicked off. Shortly after a return of kicks Reynolds fumbled the ball and Armstrong grabbed it and raced 20 yards over the Belleville line for the first touch of the game. Westbye elected to try, and converted, making the score 6 to 0 for Peterboro. This sudden break seemed to take the moral of the locals and they appeared bewildered during the remainder of the quarter. The Petes placed an aerial attack, which was returned, but the home team were gaining on the return of kicks and a little later Reynolds caught the ball behind his own line and was downed, in his tracks, for a safety touch making the score 8 to 0 for Peterboro. Play was hovering around the mid-field when the whistle ended the first quarter.

Second Quarter

The second quarter was the most thrilling period for the Belleville fans as the team came out fighting and the Belleville line of scrimmage ripped and tore the homesters to bits. Shortly after the period opened Mason Rigby went through his centre of the Petes' line for a touchdown. Rigby literally carried half of the Peterboro team over the line on this play. The convert failed and play centred around the mid field for some little time but after a few exchanges of kicks Morgan booted to go through the middle of the Petes line for another touch down for the locals. As this was not converted the score now stood Belleville 10, Peterboro 8. In the dying moments of the game Rigby was on the receiving end of a fine forward pass and raced over the line for a touch down for the Petes. The period ended shortly with the locals standing Peterboro 12, Belleville 11.

Petes Run Wild

The third period was most disastrous for the locals. They only had the ball in their possession once during the twenty-fifteen minutes and then lost it on a fumble. The Petes scored four touch downs in this period and converted three of them, Jack Gardner, for the Petes, throwing forward passes until the locals were dizzy watching the ball go over their heads. It was through this medium, that they scored all four of their touch downs making the score at the end of the quarter 36 to 11 for the Petes. Gardner was the throwing forward passer, fully 25 and 30 yards and they were rolling on the locals when the whistle sounded.

The final period saw Belleville with their backs to the wall but no matter how hard they fought they could not get the ball over the Peterboro line. On each exchange of kicks Westbye was out booting Reynolds so the locals discontinued their aerial attacks and started line plunging. This was the only salvation for the locals and try as they might they could not cross the Petes line for the much needed points.

It was during this period that Armstrong and another Peterboro player tried to "sandwich" Louie Marakas but the wily "Greek" saw them coming and did a little sidestepping and when his opponents met Armstrong was forced to retire for repairs.

Although the locals could not cross their opponents line entirely could the boosters and the final Peterboro 37, Belleville 11. The return game will be played at the Albert College grounds on Wednesday afternoon, when the locals have to overcome a 25 point lad. Harry Hall, in the line for the locals could not seem to stop the scoring Petes during the afternoon and was replaced by Hilton, a junior, who gave a very good account of himself. Jack Gardner who played one of the best games of his career and for the local line scrimmage play their usual brand of line plunging, that is quite capable of, they have an outside chance to at least tie up the round on Wednesday.

The lineups were:

Peterboro: snap, Marsh; insides, Waddell and Wood; middles, Armstrong and Wilson; outsides, Reynolds and Gardner; halves, Young and Greene; flying wings, Westbye and Clarke; subs, Clayton, Thirnbeck, Dickinson, Marsden, Sloane, Lord and Jopling, quarter Fraser.

Belleville: flying - wing, Scott; halves, Philip, Morgan and Reynolds; snap, Bell; middles, Weese and Morgan; insides Rigby and Hilton, outsides, Marakas and Scopis; subs White, Polwell, Hall.

Referee—Armstrong of Toronto. Umpire J. Grimmon, Queens; head linesman, Ken Weir, Belleville.

Alex. Kazaboski, who wrestles Jack Kogut in tomorrow night's main wrestling bout at the Belleville Arena Gardens. Kazaboski is reputed to be one of the right big men and his antics in the "quarter-circle" have made him many admirers as well as many enemies during his sojourn in America.

Mr. Kazaboski was born in Poland and when he came to America he worked in Canada as a wrestler from the late Stanley Stasiak. If he can imitate the late "Polish Lion" at all then the sporting fans are in store for a real night's entertainment tomorrow evening, as Stasiak was considered the best showman in the "rassling" business.

The stage is all set for the wrestling bouts tomorrow night at the Arena Gardens. Tonight is to be sixteen foot inside measurement and 22 foot outside measurement. The extra six feet are for "landing purposes," we suppose.

In conversation with Matchmaker Corcoran this morning Bill Rankin, of the B.A.A.A., was informed that there would will be of the very best nature as Corcoran wishes to stage future bouts in Belleville.

X—X—X

He especially recommended the final bout of the evening between Alex Kazaboski, the iron armed Pole, and Jack Kogut, the Canadian light heavyweight champion. "Those two men are of championship calibre and will give the "rassin" fans a real treat," stated Mr. Corcoran.

X—X—X

Matchmaker Playfair Brown of the Shamrock Club in Toronto, must feel quite a bit of Jack Lang, of Belleville. He is using him as the semi-final bout on tonight's card at the Toronto Arena Gardens. Lang meets Paul Hansen of Denmark and Brown expects a real battle to be staged by these two wrestlers. Jackie Johnson Toronto's undefeated featherweight is battling Knute Christener, also of Denmark in the final bout.

X—X—X

Harry Robinson took Freddie Perry, of Belleville, as his second fighter for tonight's bouts. Robinson will accompany the fighters and feels that they will be in good shape for the go.

Trenton has decided to enter two teams in the O.H.A. series this coming winter. They will sponsor an Junior and Intermediate team.

Tomorrow night's wrestling card has the local sport fans all agog. The Belleville Citizens' Band have donated their services for the evening and they will entertain the patrons with music before the bouts and during the intermissions. The members of the B.A.A.A. are indebted to the band for their services and kind offer.

The B.C.I. football team ran into a snag out at Peterboro on Saturday afternoon. The kids seemed to lose heart the first few minutes of play after Reynolds fumbled the ball and Armstrong ran through the Belleville squad for a touch. This break, along with about 2,000 howling, hostile fans, seemed to take the heart out of the locals. Although they were beaten by the score of 37 to 11, Coach Shiels feels that his kids can win the round. The locals must score 26 points more than the Petes at the game, to be played at the Albert College field, next Wednesday afternoon, in order to win the round. (Some job.)

X—X—X

Eric Westbye gave Reynolds, Belleville's kicking half-back, a swell lesson in booting the old pigskin at James Stevenson Park in Peterboro on Saturday afternoon. Reynolds looked very good in his own group but he had to take a back seat from this Peterboro kicker on Saturday.

X—X—X

The Petes have a smart team and it will be a battle royal in the return game here on Wednesday. Jack Graves played one of the best games of his career but the Petes line was a bit too tough for the lighter Belleville basketball players. Nick Philip did not play on Saturday but perhaps he will be able to cheer his boys to the Petes in the return game.

X—X—X

Weese, Morgan and Rigby played bang up games except in the third period when Belleville only had the ball in their possession once during the whole session. But in the second period the locals had all the better of the play, showing that they can "get in there" if they want to. Rigby was a sick boy on Saturday and should never have been in the game, so perhaps Wednesday will show a much different story.

X—X—X

The feature play of the day was when Armstrong and another Peterboro player decided to "sandwich" Louis Marakas but Louie saw them coming and sidestepped. The result was that Armstrong was forced to retire for repairs. This play gave the locals at least one chance to give the Petes the laugh.

X—X—X

Gordie Young, the Petes' effect-footed half back, gave the fans a real exhibition of brokfield running on different occasions. It will be a treat to see him and Dick Philip hook up here on Wednesday afternoon.

The winner of this round is to meet St Michael's of Toronto next Saturday.

CANADIAN CHAMP.

Jack Kogut, the Canadian light heavyweight champion, who will battle Alex Kazaboski, the Polish Dragon, tomorrow evening in the main battle of tomorrow evening's card. Kogut is an exponent of the famous "flying tackle" made use of by Gus Sonnenberg and Jim Mckillan in their championship bouts. Kogut has made use of the "flying tackle" so much lately that he has been named the "Little Sonnenberg." The bout between Kogut and Kazaboski will be the best two falls out of three with a time limit of two hours being placed upon the bout.

McGill Wins Harrier Meet

TORONTO, Nov. 9 (CP)—A fifty-yard lead established by R. C. J. Goode of McGill over Jack Kilbride of Toronto represented the margin of victory in the meet between University of the University of Toronto at the Intercollegiate Harriers' meet. Both McGill and Varsity scored 32 points but the victory of Goode, who finished first over the 5.6 mile course gave McGill the margin. It was the Redmen's first victory since 1919 and the first time there had been a tie in total points since the championship was inaugurated in 1909.

Bold Bad Man is Kasaboski When in Ring

GOOD CARD

Other Bouts Are Up to Standard of Main Go

"The Polish Dragon" is the name sometimes applied to Alex Kasaboski, rough and ready light heavyweight wrestler, who is to meet Jack Kogut, Canadian light heavyweight champion, in the main bout of the show at the arena tomorrow evening. Kazaboski is one of the real villians of wrestling and takes pride in the fact that he is one of the most unpopular men in the sport. He is in his glory, when the fans do him the loudest and it was after establishing a reputation for rough wrestling that he had a vicious looking dragon emblazoned on his dressing gown. Hence the nickname of "The Polish Dragon".

Kazaboski will need all his remarkable strength and all his knowledge of wrestling to pass Kogut, who has had several years of experience, knows every hold in wrestling thoroughly, and is both respected and fearless and not like to be awed by Kazaboski's reputation as a bad man.

But the action will not by any means be confined to the feature the semi-final bout promises much both bringing high class men into action. The semi-final, scheduled for forty-five minutes will introduce Frankie Hart of Holland, handsome, speedy and clever against the Danish whirlwind, Bob Nelson and it would be hard to call a winner here, both having scored some notable victories of late.

Trader Horn will contest the opener with Larry La Belle, Toronto Italian, who makes short work of his opponents wherever possible. Because of La Belle's vicious style the capacity Horn was chosen to oppose him. It looks like a great evening for the sport fans of Belleville and the surrounding district.

PASSENGER MILEAGE IS CUT BY C. P.

Extensive Changes in Schedules Are Effective Nov. 22

FAST SERVICE

MONTREAL, Nov. 5—Outstanding reductions in passenger train mileage, combined with improved facilities for travelling public between Eastern and Western Canada, comprise the highlights of an announcement made here Friday by Grant Hall, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The reduction in passenger train mileage, Mr. Hall said, was a direct result of the necessity for complete economy, and is a further extension of policies which have been followed for the past two years. With the change contemplated for Nov. 22, the actual reduction in passenger train mileage will exceed the huge total of 2,172,230, which means a yearly saving in operation and saving of 3,000,888 passenger train miles.

The most outstanding change in passenger train schedules involves the cancellation of the trains now operating each way between Montreal and Sault Ste. Marie, Nos. 505 and 506 between Montreal and Ottawa. Train No. 505 now leaves Montreal at 12.35 p.m. daily, except Sunday, and arrives in Ottawa at 3.25 p.m., while train 502 leaves Ottawa at 8.30 a.m. daily, arriving in Montreal at 11.45 a.m.

Montreal-Ottawa

The cancelled Montreal-Ottawa service will be more than replaced in so far as the travelling public is concerned by the new trains, Nos. 8 and 6, which will operate on a fast and efficient schedule between this city and Sudbury, where they will connect with the "Dominion", the famous transcontinental flier between Toronto and Vancouver. Train No. 8 will leave Montreal daily at 7 p.m., and its schedule calls for a two-hour-and-fifteen-minute run to Ottawa, a speed made possible by the first-class roadbed and equipment.

This train will also save Montreal and Eastern Canadian business men a full day in their journeys to Winnipeg. Eastern Canadian business men, for example, who leave Montreal at 7 o'clock on a Monday evening will arrive in Winnipeg at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, instead of 9 p.m. Wednesday, as at present. This is made possible by the fact that to Sudbury, and by the fact that the through sleeping-cars from Montreal will be attached to the westbound "Dominion", train No. 3, at that point. Returning Easterners will be able to spend another day in the Winnipeg, as the rearranged schedules permit them to leave Winnipeg at 8.30 p.m., on the eastbound "Dominion", train No. 4, to be transferred to No. 6 at Sudbury, and arrive in Montreal at 11.40 a.m., instead of leaving Winnipeg at 9.10 a.m. on the "Imperial" and spending the entire day on train in order to arrive in Montreal at 8 a.m. Train No. 6 has another advantage for east-bound travellers, in that it permits those proceeding to the Maritime Provinces to make a direct connection with train No. 60 for Saint John N. B.

Trains Nos. 5 and 6, in addition to carrying through Vancouver sleeping cars in and out of Montreal, will also carry through sleeping cars for Minneapolis and St. Paul. Trains 3 and 6 will connect at Sudbury with trains 27 and 28, which operate between Toronto and Sault Ste. Marie, thus providing a through service between TORONTO and Minneota's twin cities.

Extra Time In Vancouver.

The extra time at the city of the terminal in Vancouver, for business or pleasure in a Western centre is extended also to Vancouver, where travellers may spend an additional night, and still arrive in Montreal during the morning of the day they desire. The Canadian Pacific has made this possible through the operation of train No. 6, between Sudbury and Montreal. Instead of leaving Vancouver on the "Imperial" at 10 p.m. on a Monday, for example, travellers will be able after Nov. 22 to leave Vancouver on the "Dominion" at 10.30 Tuesday morning, and arrive in Montreal at 11.45 a.m. Saturday.

The "Imperial", No. 1, the transcontinental train between Montreal and Vancouver, will continue to leave the city at 10.00 p.m. daily. The train will arrive in Winnipeg daily at 7 p.m., instead of 7 p.m. Arrival time in Vancouver will be 8.40 p.m., instead of 8.15 p.m. The arrival and departure times of train No. 2, the eastbound "Imperial," are unchanged west of Winnipeg. Train 6No. 2 under the new schedule will leave Winnipeg at 9.10 a.m., instead of 10 o'clock, and will arrive in Montreal at 8.30 a.m., instead of 8.40 a.m. daily. Of particular interest to Quebec and Ontario is the fact that the westbound "Imperial," leaving Montreal at 10.10 p.m. daily, will make the local stops now made by train No. 8, which leaves Montreal for the Sault daily at 8.15 p.m., but which will be withdrawn on Nov. 22.

TO INTERVIEW PREMIER

Stratford, Nov. 5—A deputation from the Stratford Ship-by-Rail Association will join with similar deputations from all over the Province to wait upon Premier Henry, Nov. 17 to urge legislation which would put truck and rail transportation on a more competitive basis. In pointing out the loss of revenue to the railways through the alleged unfair competition of the trucks, the railmen will urge support for legislation which would stipulate regular hours for truck workers, and bring a share of the gasoline tax to the municipalities.

What Theatrical Managers Say of Coming Attractions

At The Belle

"PERSONAL MAID" CHARACTER FITS SPARKLING NANCY

Miss Pearl Dresserware Tonight

Manager Pearl Dresserware announces that one of the most delightful actresses the Pearl Dresserware Set will be presented to each lady attending the Belle tonight but only one article to each lady.

Nancy Carroll, in the title role of the Belle theatre feature for Tuesday and Tuesday, "Personal Maid," has a part which lends itself readily to her dazzling personality. The picture, made from the best-seller novel by Grace Perkins, was directed by Monta Bell with a well-known cast of stage and screen favorites supporting the star.

"Personal Maid," portrays the experiences of a pretty maid in a home of wealth, and her adventures when she becomes "a lady" herself. Dissatisfied with her environment, Nancy Regan accepts a position as her East Side tenement home and shift for herself. She becomes an efficient "personal" maid, but finds the job calls for many odd duties which only her own quickness and intelligence can help her discharge.

She is sent to coax the wayward, college-boy son of the family to be good, and falls in love with him. She attracts the attention of a wellmade business friend of the family, and is disillusioned. Then she takes a fling at being a "lady" in a fashionable Florida resort, hires a personal maid of her own, and is having a grand time when called back to earth and romance.

The cast includes Pat O'Brien, well-known on the Broadway stage, and the young Gene Raymond, Georgs Fawcett has an interesting character role, and so has Mae Roland.

That's why salves, suppositories and cutting fail. Dr. Leonhard's prescription, HEM-ROID succeeds because it removes congestion, restores circulation, heals and strengthens the diseased parts. LATE RASPBERRIES

Montreal, Que. (By The Canadian Press)— William Williams of Ahuntsic, on its island of Montreal, awoke one morning recently to find a sprig of raspberry bush in his garden bearing a dozen delicious berries. From available horticultural records, it would appear that this late seasonal arrival is unique—not to say extraordinary.

At The Capitol

"TEN NIGHTS BRINGS BACK THE DAYS OF REAL ACTING

In any assessment of the Capitol "Ten Nights In A Bar-Room" now showing at the Capitol Theatre holds the interest of its audience chiefly because it does not allow spoken dialog to at any time interfere with the acting capabilities of its experienced cast. Had set endless flow of words been injected into the scenes much of its powerful dramatic appeal would have been lost.

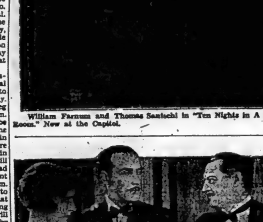
As it is "Ten Nights" presents an excellent combination of silent drama together with just the right amount of dialog, thereby permitting the audience to experience and feel the emotions and moods of the players more than have spoken lines recited to them.

The story is one of John Lowe and his family. Little Mary Morgan could not forget the time when her father was a kind and loving pal to her, even though he had now become a confirmed drunkard, he was her father and that was all that mattered.

The memory of these happier days, is the great stirring force that takes the little child out of her bed at night to go in search of her father. She is the only one person that can deter him from his sodden path. Her faith in him in the end is rewarded but not until a tragic happening occures which brings about her father's regeneration. The picture closes with a smashing fight between William Parnum and Thomas Santschi, a stand saloon burns over their heads.

Betty Lou gives startling realism to her part as Mary Morgan in the modern screen version of this old stage favorite. In the opening scenes of the picture she is delightful as the happy but child like daughter of Joe Morgan, played by William Parnum. Then as her father sinks to the abysmal depths of a drunkard, Patty Lou's pitiful struggle to keep in a performance started by a poignant and sympathetic appeal that will bring your heart to your throat.

You will wonder at the exquisite simplicity with which this lovable child interprets the character of Mary Morgan. The waiflike face and her little face and the thrill of her voice fill one of the important roles.



Patty Lou Lynd is destined to win an enviable place among the few really great children of the screen.

"Ten Nights In A Bar-Room" is playing today, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Capitol.

RELIEF WORK

Town Council of Picton Decides on Storm Sewers

PICTON, Nov 5—(Special)—Arrangements are being made to hold spelling matches and musical competitions in Prince Edward County this winter.

Spelling matches will be held the last Friday in March in each of the townships and the winners in each county-wide competition at which township champions compete. Musical competitions will also be held and it is planned to have these take place at the same time as the final spelling match in Picton.

Inspector C. E. Stothers is in charge and the committee is made up Miss Dunkley, Miss L. Boyce, Miss Mitchell, Miss Olive MacDonald, Miss K. Stark, with the musical committee: Miss Ida Mae Hepburn, Principal Picton Collegiate, H. W. Brown of Wellington Consolidated School, Mr. Hall of Bloomfield C.O.I., Misses D. Bellman, Margaret Crawford, Lillian Hall, Miss Hazelip, Dey Dulmage, and Fred Vancoda, Principal Picton Public School with the spelling matches.

Several schools receive musical instruction and it is hoped that others will join with it up.

The Picton Town Council held a special meeting on Thursday evening to consider the spending the $5,000, Government Unemployment Relief grant. It was decided unanimously, it had been decided to widen Main street but as this meeting that plan was dropped. Instead the $5,000, will be spent on building storm sewers on Centre street, filling the road on Prospect Avenue and putting in waterworks on York Street so as to serve Crown Street Public School. This will leave a balance of $500 and this will be spent in repairing other badly marred streets this winter.

This work will give more employment to unskilled labor than if Main Street were widened.

Though the street will not be widened it will be improved as the Bell Telephone Company will remove their poles and use them on the Hydro. This should add much to the appearance of the town.

MACHINE GUNS KILL CITIZENS

Saloon Scene of Wildest Shooting in Detroit's History

Detroit, Nov. 9—Three weeks and a day after the killing of Jack Ritvela in self-defense, and the first time since then he had left his home without a bodyguard, Joe Ritvela, notorious liquor operator was shot to death in a hail of fire from a shotgun and a sub-machine gun in a Hamtramck saloon at 5.05 o'clock last night.

The murder of the place, Chas. Lear, 34 years old, was killed with him, and Emanuel, John Pellitier, 40, died at 11 p.m., as the result of what police say is the most indiscriminate shooting in downriver gang history. The slayers escaped.

A driver had walked at the wheel, and Lear, concealing their weapons under heavy overcoats, drove to the saloon and got into the car, witnessed said. An hour later the sedan was reported heading for Detroit.

RUSSIA HALTS TO MARK 14TH ANNIVERSARY

Five-Year Plan is Forgotten For Moment

MILLION CELEBRATE

Demonstrations in Honor of Revolution Last Till Evening

(By Stanley P. Richardson)

MOSCOW, Nov. 8 (AP) — Russia stopped work today on the Five Year Plan to commemorate the fourteenth anniversary of the October revolution which overthrew Kerensky's provisional government and established the Bolsheviks in power.

The capital led the way in the celebration with an impressive military and civil demonstration in Red Square in which more than 1,000,000 persons participated. Bands blared the "Internationale," troops of the Red army passed in a two hour review before Joseph Stalin, President Kalinin, Premier Molotov, war commissar Voroshilov and other high officials of the government and the Communist party who watched from the balustrade atop the tomb of Lenin.

Cavalry, infantry, artillery, tank corps and other units swept by at the salute and military airplanes dipped low overhead, their motors beating a slocesto echo off the walls of the Kremlin.

Before the parade, Voroshilov, mounted on a prancing horse, admistered the oath of fidelity to the republic to thousands of young soldiers massed before him in their first appearance in army service. They cheered lustily at their commander-in-chief wheeled off at the conclusion of the brief ceremony.

Besides most of the population of Moscow, including women and children, thousands of workers came from all parts of the nation on special trains to participate in the celebration. Among the marchers were small delegations from Canada, Great Britain, United States, France, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Belgium, Holland, Spain and Mongolia.

The demonstrations, which began in the early forenoon, lasted until evening.

COOL WEATHER LIVENS TRADE

One of Largest Markets of Autumn is Held

Saturday's market was a typical November market and the weather was quite chilly but the citizens were out in goodly numbers to swell the crowd that made one of the largest markets that has been seen locally in quite some time.

Both the outside and inside market were crowded and the buyers took advantage of the considerably low prices that prevailed. At the inside market butter remained at the prevailing price of 25c to 26c per pound. Eggs were down a cent or so when they sold for 35c to 39c a dozen. More ducks than usual were in evidence and brought from $1.25 to $1.50 according to their size. Chickens also were seen in large numbers and dropped as low as 50c apiece, while pullets were sold at from $1.25 up.

The outside market also was the scene of large activities when prices of vegetables seemed to stay down. Plenty of apples were sold and the varieties were such as McIntosh Reds at $1.50; Tallman Sweets 2b; Spies $1.50 and Snow apples 75c per bushel. In the vegetable line beets, parsnips, carrots and turnips brought 30c a peck while cauliflowers sold for from 15 to 20c each. Potatoes brought from 55c to 65c a bag, while celery sold for the bunch. Cabbage 5c to 10c and pumpkins 5c to 10c were soon sold.

SENATE LEAD REPUBLICAN

Death of Democratic Senator Caraway Disturbs Control

Washington, D.C., Nov. 9 (AP)—Fair, mild weather today did not disturbed the alignment of Congress seems to have settled as last upon Republican control of the senate and Democratic organization of the house.

The death last night of a Democratic Senator, Thaddeus H. Caraway, of Arkansas, restored the Republican majority by one which existed by the recent death of Senator Dwight W. Morrow, of New Jersey.

With a Republican likely to be appointed to fill the New Jersey vacancy before Congress convenes a month from today and a special election necessary after the first of the year in Arkansas, the two parties will hold a two vote sway over the Democrats under control of death or illnesses intervene.

The line-up now is: 47 Republicans, 46 Democrats, one Farmer-Laborite and two vacancies.

LIBRARY CORNER

With the eyes of the world centred on affairs in the Orient, the account of Asiatic problems of over-population given by Etienne Dennery in his book "Asia teeming millions" will be of particular interest to Library borrowers. The author, a young Frenchman, has based his facts on his actual experiences in Japan, China, and India. He has tabulated his results into three parts: Over-population in Japan. The expansion of China, and Indian emigration. The chapter dealing with the Chinese and Japanese in Manchuria will be well worth reading in view of the present serious situation.

"Two biographies of note are "William Congreve" by D. Crane Taylor and "Marshal Lyautey" by Andre Maurois. The former book was presented to the library recently, by the author since Belleville was the birthplace of his wife. Mrs. Taylor (formerly of the English dramatist is a critical study, which has been favourably reviewed by leading critics. This is the second biography to be written about Congreve.

The first was written by Mr. Edmund Gosse in 1888. The fact that little material was available and that the dramatist had guarded the details of his life so carefully, made collecting his material very difficult for the author. However, he has succeeded in writing a very comprehensive study of "The first comic dramatist in English literature."

Andre Maurois' book is a sympathetic interpretation of Lyautey, one of the great soldier-administrators of France whose leadership established the French colonial empire in Morocco. Andre Maurois in "Disraeli" has described the Marshal as the empire-builder of yesterday, and as a citizen of today, in Thorey, a tiny Lorraine village.

Impressions of Russia by a Frenchman, is given in Henri Barbusse's volume "One looks at Russia." In this book is a collection of pictures of Russian life as seen in his travels through that country and he discusses such subjects as the new Soviet films, the oldest man alive, a residence of the Black Sea district who is over 140 years of age, and Congress impressions. An interview with Maxim Gorki, whose volume "The magnet" is among the library's new fiction titles will be of interest to the reader.

EZRA PRINGLE RECALLS TRAIN

Memory of Napanee Man Goes Back Sixty-five Years

Montreal, November 9—Seventy-five years ago last month the first train between Montreal and Toronto opened and Ezra Pringle, who ran now part of the Canadian National System, it was recalled today by railroad historians—and Monday, October 27th, 1856 was an important day in the life of both cities. Trains had previously operated between Point St. Charles station in Montreal and Brockville, and between Brockville and Belleville but the train which operated out of Montreal on October 27th, 1856, was the first through train to connect the two growing cities. At this time the run between Montreal and Toronto required fourteen hours; today's International Limited, traversing the same trackage, 334 miles between the two cities, covered the distance in the time of six hours the record for daily passenger trains service over a like distance. Ezra Pringle, former coachman, of Napanee, is one Canadian, who saw the first train operate through his home station and who was down at the station to watch the International Limited pass through on her regular run, commemorating the seventy-fifth anniversary of service on the longest steam-railway on the continent.

"The first train I recall," explained seven coaches," Mr. Pringle stated. "Its little engine the tender filled with cordwood, would look strange to people of today accustomed to the big 6100 and 6700 locomotives, and so would the coaches, painted yellow as compared to the present-day all-steel sleeping and observation cars. However, to us it was wonderful and signalled forward that all we had previously known was the stagecoach."

Montreal and Toronto newspapers heralded the arrival of the first through trains as their respective stations as important steps in the development of trade. The first citizens copies of the Montreal Gazette Herald, Transcript and Advertiser were received in Toronto on the day of publication while the Toronto Leader a day old, was, since ceased publication, reached Montreal at 10.00 o'clock on the night of its issue. At Montreal a grand ball was held in honour of the occasion, and at each of the little towns along the line, great throngs of people were on hand from the country district to see the locomotive as it swept along to-wards its destination.

Since Dominion Day, 1900, the interevening towns have witnessed the daily passing in each direction of the International Limited, which now makes the run between Montreal and Toronto in six hours for the 334 intervening miles, the fastest train over a like distance in the world.

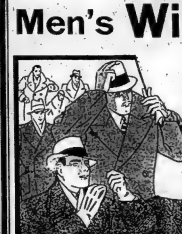
CANADA GAINS SALMON TRADE

Displaces United States in British Market For Canned Salmon

Ottawa, Nov. 9—Canada is displacing the United States in the British market for canned salmon and for the first nine months of the present calendar year the Dominion's exports were more than double the exports over the corresponding period last year.

Up to the end of September, according to the current issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal, the United Kingdom imported from Canada 1,000,000 cases of canned salmon, while importations from the United States totalled 800,000 cases. During the same period last year Canada exported 400,000 cases of salmon while that of the United States was approximately 1,700,000 cases.



Britain imported 362,000 cwt of canned salmon during 1930.

KING GEORGE OPENS NATIONAL PARLIAMENT

Amid Pomp and Glitter of Tradition His Majesty Opens New Parliament

War Robes Over Scarlet Uniform of Field Marshal

WISHED GOD SPEED

Mandate is Given and We Expect You to Achieve Success

London, Nov. 10 (AP)—Amid the pomp and glitter of tradition the King, wearing the crown of Empire and ermine robes over the scarlet uniform of a field marshal, today opened the new National Parliament, whose task is to rescue the nation from its financial and industrial crisis.

Speaking from the great golden throne in the House of Lords, His Majesty made the new government—headed once more by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, Godspeed in its undertakings.

"My people have given you an unprecedented mandate," he said in a voice which rang clearly through the chamber, "and we expect you to achieve success."

This afternoon the House of Commons will begin a session which probably will bulk large in Great Britain's history. It is not unlikely that it will forsake the British policy of free trade and join the ranks of the protective tariff countries.

CLAIMS CANCER IS PARASITIC

"Cell" Theory is Discredited in New Book Issued Today

LONDON, Nov. 10.—(Canadian Press Cable)— The whole "cell" theory on which the bulk of medical research on cancer has hitherto been based is challenged by Dr. W. E. Gye and Dr. W. J. Purdy in their book "The Causes of Cancer" which was published today.

After six years of intensive experimental work at the Medical Institute of medical research Dr. Gye claims cancer is parasitic and claims to be able to extract "something" from cancer similar to animals which, when added to a special treated extract from fowl manure, causes a new growth in chicken.

The authors claim that the methods of handling and classifying Mammalian viruses could be discovered a few years ago about the immunization of man against cancer would be available. The discovery they claim, is caused by virus comparable with fowl plague, but because spotted fever and infantile paralysis.

Dr. Gye purposes to show malignant tumours can be passed on to chicken when extracts of tumors "rendered free from all cellular forms" are injected. Previously it was assumed that to transmit tumor from one animal to another implantation of the actual cancer cells was necessary. . . .

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 10. — (By the Canadian Press) — Canadian supply of granite rock, suitable and desirable for building purposes, has been enriched by the discovery of a large deposit of red granite at Collins Inlet, on the north shore of Georgian Bay, in Ontario. FALL PLOWING NEARLY OVER

All Crops Have Been Harvested and Threshed

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 10 (CP)—Fall plowing is pretty practically completed in Ontario, and almost all crops have been harvested and threshed. Mild weather and good moisture have been responsible for what has come through the Autumn in excellent condition for the fall rains and of grain necessary than in most years.

Milk production has held up well according to the weekly crop report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, although many cheese factories have now closed for the next few weeks.

Export buyers are taking considerable quantities of dairy cows and heifers in Dundas County.

Provincial Country reports butter production ahead of the same period last year.

•Fall wheat is making favorable progress, all over the province, although fears are expressed in some quarters that the unusually mild weather will cause too much growth and expose the crop to frost damage this winter.

Pinch of Lack of Money is Felt by Ex-King's Men

PARIS Nov. 10—(AP)—The retinue which followed King Alfonso of Spain into exile is beginning to feel the pinch of financial need and the infanta Eulalia said today that she planned to sell her jewels so that Princess Beatrice, Prince of Bourbon-Ucrace, might marry the Princess Beatrice, daughter of the former monarch.

"These reports that Alfonso is opposed to the marriage are ridiculous," she said, "He is not opposed. We simply have been unable to meet the cost because prince and I has any money. The Boys's father is Don Honse D'Orleans has it a large family to support and to educate—I've got to get money. Then the princess' marriage can take place."

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION IS BLAMED

HAMILTON, Ont., Nov. 10.—Police believe the origin of the fire which destroyed the barn and cattle of Alexander Quinn at Hannon late night was spontaneous combustion. In the fire of last night it is believed that the hour quantity of hay stowed in the barn became ignited from its own heat.

Authorities are conducting a close inquiry however.

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 10. — The average value of the pound sterling was declared by the Department of National Revenue today to be $4.36. This will be the value effective from Nov. 16 to Nov. 30 in applying the special or dumping duty against British goods.

FOOD READY FOR THE NEEDY

Healthy Signs Seen Every where at No. 2 Fire Hall

Nearly half a ton of white, navy beans are bagged and piled in No. 2 fire hall, in preparation for distribution among the needy of the city, and some 200 bags of potatoes bought from nearby farms are now on hand, and will be given out under the leadership of Fire Chief Lynch, shown more by good acts than words, their desire to help the city's unfortunates.

At present the floor of the fire shed is covered foot deep with new, clean sawdust, waiting for the carload of potatoes, while a race is also being built for other vegetables they will donate. Because they know the city and its inhabitants far better than the average man, they prefer to work independently of the General Relief Committee, as they so capably did last Winter, acting further under and on suggestions from the officers of the Salvation Army.

While they do not know yet whether or not their donations of over a carload of potatoes and a very large quantity of beans that last year will be exceeded this year by the demands on them, nevertheless they are confident that as long as their supply of funds and foodstuff holds out, the family in Belleville will suffer actual want.

JAPANESE ASK CHINESE FORCES TO WITHDRAW

Request That a Distance of 300 Yards Separate Forces

FIRED BLANK

"All Quiet" on Front But War Likely to Break at Any Time

By W. V. Fennell, Associated Press Staff Writer)

Tientsin, Nov. 10 (AP)—The ominous hollow booming of a field gun together with machine burst on Chinese gun fire in the area between the Japanese concession and Chinese City carried news of another battle to rival the sanguinary struggle for the Japanese and Chinese forces yesterday.

The night was ominously quiet. In the "no man's land" between the concession and the Chinese position the situation was taunt as a drawn cord, and likely to snap at any moment.

The Japanese demand on Chinese forces to withdraw at least 300 meters from the concession boundary brought the Japanese defense line perilously close to the Chinese headquarters.

It is believed the field gun was fired blank, but at the risk now on the tempo of its thundering increased and there was a conviction, that continued provocation by the city police would bring a battle, with possibly a Japanese invasion and occupation of the city.

The Japanese had relaxed none of their precautions about the concession this morning and all foreigners venturing within were close questioned by the reserve troops on guard.

The Japanese Commander, General Kashii, issued a proclamation yesterday that if Japanese interests were endangered in any way, or if the honor of the Japanese army were threatened his troops would "take the necessary steps." This was taken to mean he would occupy the city by force.

ASSESSMENT FOR SCHOOLS

Shore Gas Co. Brings Matter Before Council

Mr. G. D. Conant, solicitor for the Ontario Shore Gas Company, appeared before the city council Monday night in order to bring to the attention of that body the question of interest on debentures on gas which had been charged against the company as from April first last whereas the interest should have been charged against the city until the end of August, the company taking over the plant on September 1st. This is a matter of about $4,600. The question will be dealt with by the executive under a recommendation.

The company also asked as having been overpaid to the city by the gas company in its settlement. The question of school assessment on the gas plant was the more important. The assessment demands for general purposes at $133,000 according to the by-law, and for schools for ten years. But this does not, according to the by-law, affect the school assessment according to the act, says the assessor, there can be no fixing of assessment for school purposes. The assessment for schools has been set by Mr. T. E. Ketchenson, assessor, at $225,000.

Mr. Conant said the company wanted to live up to its agreement in every way and remarked that there would be no cause for regret by the city in having entered into an agreement with the company. The company has put in a better treatment from the city as the company was willing to give. He said that the agreement as understood by the members of the committee was that assessment for assessment just made is $225,000 or $100,000 for school purposes more than for general purposes. This will amount to a tax based on $100,000 for school assessment.

The company will appeal the assessment for school purposes, Mr. Conant stated.

The council as a whole was taken entirely by surprise.

There the matter stands.

New Metal Alloy Has Been Perfected in Montreal

MONTREAL, Que., No. 10. — After two years of experiment and research, a Montreal firm today announced perfection of a new metal alloy to replace tungsten steel tools for cutting and turning processes in industrial plants. The new metal, with extremely durable cutting edge, has been formed from combination of metal and alloys.

In an experiment today, a steela minute, tool used for turning ordinary post buttons turned only 20 buttons before it was necessary to have it reground. The new invention was then attached and turned out twenty times as many buttons without showing any signs of dulling. An ordinary steel tool will turn each button at the rate of 300 per hour, the new carside metal attained a speed of 400 feet

PLANE FLIES FOR LOAD OF POPPIES

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 10 (CP)—A Royal Canadian Air Force plane winged its way to Montreal shortly before noon today, a messenger for the Canadian Legion Poppy Day.

Seeking additional supplies, in no less a time as possible permission was obtained from the Minister of National Defence for the sending of a R. A. F. plane.

HUGE TUBER IS GROWN AT ROBLIN

This is a country of superlatives —We have the finest farmers, the sweetest berries, the most perfect melons, and apples by the score have been brought into this office with varying weights, colors and tastes.

Today, however, there reposes on the desk, the grotesque of all admiring eyes, and the object of much comment on the part of those who have seen it, a tuber without a blemish, clear and symmetrical, if made into potato chips would reach from one indeterminate point to the other—and back again. Or, if cooked up for dinner, would be sufficient for an average family of three.

Taken from the potato patch of Mr. Thomas Corrigan, Roblin, it weighs two and one half pounds, is five inches long, and seven inches long. So far the honor belongs to Mr. Corrigan.

TRANSFORMER CAUSES FIRE

Carrying what is thought to be an overload, a transformer on Victoria Ave., burned out. The burning of the transformer caused the hydro pole, on which the transformer was attached, to catch fire. The fire department was called to the scene of the blaze about 8:30 a.m. last evening. Nothing could be done except use the small fire extinguishers and after the arrival of the city hydro employees the trouble was soon rectified. After the transformer blew out the people living in that vicinity were without electric lights until the hydro employees arrived upon the scene.

found the government will ask parliament for power to deal with it. The Canadian delegate will study the Manchurian conflict but he officially will not have any decisive latest information tomorrow if it is asked for.

Talk for the Round Table conference concerning which Mahatma Gandhi has been so gloomy recently he said it will continue and he expressed the hope that India also would be able to reach a measure of agreement which would enable its government to go ahead with its public improvement proposals for Indian Dominion status.

A plea for establishment of a system of empire tariff and other measures to prevent dumping violently assailed Lloyd Conversation who in an address of thanks in the regret of the throne, said the throne, said that millions of British people were looking to the House of Commons to amend it and "there were many hoping that this house will establish a system of protective tariffs because they believe that will be the means to get work."

The government would have the overwhelming support of the country, he said, if it took measures to attack the situation by the protection of large imports which would require legislation.

George Lansbury, speaking as Leader of the Labor Opposition, said that the government was not national but took own office by machinery and fraud. He said the Labor opposition would put before the House proposals for dealing with the economic crisis. In the foreign field, he demanded, the government should inform the House plainly what measures it was taking in conjunction with other nations to bring the Manchurian dispute to an end without further bloodshed.

Speech From Throne

Following is the text of the speech from the throne at the forming given to representatives of my Dominions in 1930, measures will be laid before you to give statutory effect to certain of the declarations and resolutions of the Imperial Conferences of 1926 and 1930.

"This measure is designed to make clear the powers of the Dominion parliaments and to promote a spirit of free cooperation among members of the British Commonwealth of nations.

Speech Closing

"My government has received from the government of my Dominion of Canada a proposal that the economic conference which was planned in 1930 should be convened at Ottawa as soon as possible. The invitation has been welcomed by my ministers and will be considered in a most sympathetic spirit and with the earnest desire to come to some mutually advantageous arrangements with the governments of my Dominions.

"The nation at a general election, endorsed those measures for securing economy and balancing the National budget which constituted the first essential steps in solution of the financial and economic problems with which the country has been confronted.

"The nation was also invited by my ministers to empower them to pursue a policy designed fully to reestablish confidence in our financial stability, and to give them authority to impose such tariffs as the Conservative balance of trade.

"I pray that the support from the nation unfettered discretion to consider every matter likely to be of assistance in these matters and they have been given a clear, emphatic mandate to that effect. Important problems involved already are under consideration by my government. Decisions will be taken and applied with the least possible delay and in dih course any legislation that may be required will be submitted to parliament.

"I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon your deliberations.

The hour of bereavement finds the mind unwilling and unready to grapple with the commercial side of funeral arrangements. Still, price must be considered in the case of average or limited means.

Our showroom, where the price of funeral goods is plainly marked on each casket to be chosen from, is especially arranged to meet this necessity.

It is a fact that 29 per cent of our adult funerals cost less than $140.

Team Chaperoned By L. Patrick Has Fine Material

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 10 (CP)—Ready and eager for the whistle that will launch them on their sixth season in the National Hockey League, the New York Rangers will wind up their preliminary training session tonight at the local Springfield Arena. Tonight the blue shirts will entrain for Montreal where, Thursday evening, they are to face the world's champion Canadiens in the opening tussle of the 1931-32 schedule.

It is a confident troupe that manager Lester Patrick will chaperon to the Canadian metropolis. On the "paper" the current Ranger squad appears to be one of the strongest to ever dispor in blue shirt regalia, and it is not without reason that the 'silver fox' is looking forward confidently and optimistically to the coming campaign. With three well balanced forward lines, an array of high calibre defencemen and a good keeper who is ranked with the best in professional hockey, the Rangers are indeed entitled to view the future with keen expectations.

MODERN RADIO RECEIVER CAN STILL BE USED

Radio Engineer States That Television Will Not Interfere

NOT OBSOLETE

Attachment Can Be Put On Ordinary Radio Set

When television emerges from the experimental stage, what will become of the modern radio receiver?

R. A. Swartz, one of Canada's outstanding radio engineers who has been in close touch with this new development in the radio field both in the Dominion and the United States, declares that when visual broadcasting becomes practical, the up-to-date radio, which has been perfected to a higher degree than the broadcasting stations themselves, will form an important part of any television equipment introduced.

Present owners and prospective purchasers of a modern radio need have no further fear that their sets will become obsolete when television is brought generally to the air. The present day broadcast receiver will undoubtedly form the basis for the sound channel, while an entirely new receiver will be required for the picture image. The point is, continued Mr. Swartz, that the receiver will be necessary when television arrives. Those now owning a top-to-date receiver will only have to buy the additional equipment necessary for television.

Although radio engineers all over the world have been working on alternative research work for some time in an effort to perfect television to the point where it can be widely introduced into the home, they are all agreed, continued Mr. Schwarz, that their efforts so far are still in the experimental stage and comparable to sound broadcasting of twenty years ago. Television, he says, has not yet reached the standard of the experimental days of radio, which is taken over a decade to develop to the present point of perfection.

Today, according to Mr. Schwarz, television is in this position. It can only be broadcast satisfactorily a distance of thirty to fifty miles from a station using as high as 5,000 watts. Static interference, even in the most modern sound receiver has not been able to overcome it has only been worse in its effect on television. Due to the fact that television requires a wide channel, approximately ten times wider than the usual broadcast, it is necessary to use very high frequencies (short waves) for transmission. These high frequencies are much more susceptible to static interference, the broadcast frequencies available at the present time, is decidedly poor, reception at the broadcast image, which at its best is not as clear as a newspaper picture.

In time, concludes Mr. Schwarz, television will be perfected, but receiving equipment for general use will not be manufactured until the newcomer in the radio field has proven itself to be out of the experimental stage. When it does, continued Mr. Schwarz, sound and some the modern sound receiver will continue to be used in the combined television and sound unit.

HOLLOWAY ST. FALL BANQUET

Old Time Supper is Well Attended Monday Evening

No season on record has been marked by more general support to banquets than the present autumn. A series of evening functions of this kind has been given the rounds of the entire countryside and school sections and churches and in spite of the large number of the affairs which grace the scene up to date, more successful events have been held than the generous support of the fall season of 1931.

Holloway Street United Church congregation or other district was true to its traditional success on Monday evening when hundreds gathered about the piled-high tables in the school auditorium and there partook of the necessities of life and the delicacies which grace them happily away with a peaceful outlook upon life, for banquets and dinners are conducive to optimism and to make people enjoy life. The ladies of the congregation put on the accustomed delicacies, beans, meats, jellies, cakes, relishes, celery, pies of all depths, colors and makes, lemon, pumpkin, berry, custard, and infinitum, and a continually passing series of plate after plate of cakes, tarts and so on. The consumption of the appeal of the gastronomic was suggested on every side to find countenance.

Rev. Harold B. Neal, minister of Holloway Street United Church, was in charge of the program and greeted the hundreds of the congregation and other guests. During the repast while the people were waiting for the "other" table, the Holloway Street orchestra played. The post-prandial program was of a high class. Little Miss Helen Brown, delighter of crowds with her clever monologues and stories, was on the platform four times to satisfy her hearers. Mrs. Percy Mott rendered stories of laughter with her depiction of "Spring Clipping," a clay hair-cutting drama. She concluded saang a number, Mr. Jack Green gave a cornet solo, "A Happy Day" and "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise" for encore, his clear trumpet notes delighting the audience. Mr. Alec Gordon rendered a fine organ number as well as rendering accompaniments on the piano Mrs. Hagerman sang an appealing song.

The Salvation Army quartette, instrumentalists and vocalists, were given a warmth of welcome when assured them that their efforts were appreciated. They first played a selection from the "Siege of Rochelle" and as encore rendered "Joy of Spring." Demonstration of their vocal powers in quartette was given in "Which Way Are You Going?" and "Walking is the Light," the ragtime, balance, richness of tone and harmony making their contribution in these numbers of the highest merit. They came on the program at the close, rendering the instrumental quartette "Russian Memories" by Rimmer, an outstanding performance among the brilliant numbers given by this organization. Dorothy Pharaoh, vocal number concluded their portion of the program. The members of this organization are John Green, cornet; Arhold Brown, cornet, Joe Johnson, tenor horn, and Stanley Lessels, euphonium. Ensign Calvert, of the Salvation Army spoke a few words.

The total proceeds of the evening amounted to about two hundred dollars.

YOUNG SCOT ON WAY HOME

Likes Canada and Will Be Back Some Day

Monday night only nine transients sought shelter at the city police station. One young Scotchman in passing out this morning stopped at the Sergeant's desk and when asked if he wanted anything, he replied: "No, but I thought it might be necessary to show myself before leaving". He was a clean, healthy looking young chap and said that he had been in this country six years—living in Stratford and other places and also out in Western Ontario. He got along very well until two years ago, but since then it has been hard going. Now he is en route to his home in Scotland, where his people operate three butcher shops and are comfortably situated. He said he reaches Montreal, for which place he started out this morning on the "hike"—a steamship ticket, which his people have arranged for will be given to him.

"You will be back in Canada," said a reporter, who was standing by. "I suppose I shall," he replied. "It is a fine country when things are good."

RUSSEL ROWE SAYS BRADLEY IS ASSAILANT

Crown Rests its Case in Shooting Affray at Newton Robinson

GIRL TESTIFIES

Trouble Appears to Have Been Over Miss Carter

Barrie, Ont., Nov. 10 (CP)—Late last night the Crown rested its case in the trial of Gordon Bradley, Bond Head farmer, who faces three charges in connection with the shooting of Russell Rowe, of Newton Robinson, on June 20, 1930. Bradley is charged with attempted murder, shooting with intent to maim and shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm.

Relations between Miss Edith Carter, of Bond Head, and Bradley and the accused were explained by Miss Carter in the stand. She had been engaged to Rowe but broke off Rowe she said, for this reason, some six months prior to the shooting she had suggested to Bradley they go together. Bradley, she stated, was accepted amicably by Bradley, she testified.

"What was said between you and him at the time," Peter White, K. C., Bradley's prosecutor, asked.

"I told him people might talk about it, as he lived in the same place."

She denied telling Bradley that her second cousin, George Martin, had told her he was going to "get Russell Rowe."

Under cross-examination Miss Carter denied that there had been any friction or unpleasantness between herself and Bradley.

Provincial Constable John Kelly of Barrie produced photograph taken of the Rowe farm at Newton Robinson. Upon arrival with Provincial Constable Hemphill he found a pool of blood in the centre of the granary floor, and just from the entrance.

"I saw the accused the following day at his father's farm," said Constable Kelly. "I told him I knew Rowe, but couldn't give any clue."

Later Bradley told me that on Sunday night, June 21, Clarence Martin, of Stroud, had been visiting Miss Carter at Bond Head. About three weeks prior to that, Bradley said, Miss Carter had told him Martin threatened to get Rowe because she had refused to go out with him (Martin). Martin, Bradley said, had been going with Miss Carter for about three months, two years ago. About a year ago his father died, and he renewed his acquaintance with Miss Carter."

Russell Rowe testified he had been engaged as an accountant in Toronto for some thirteen years and for three years in Sudbury. During the time he had been at his father's home at Newton Robinson, and again in the summer months after breaking his leg in Sudbury. He had a beautiful 9-point Irish Carter?" asked Mr. White.

"Yes."

"How long had you known her? "All my life."

"How did you become engaged? "Two and a half or three years before I was shot."

Rowe stated he had not known the accused prior to the shooting nor had he ever seen him to know who he was.

Rowe related how he had taken his brother's car to visit Miss Carter on the night of June 20, 1930. Upon arrival home, he had heard a shot and seen a flare. "Just then I noticed a man get up and walk toward me," he said. "I could not have put my hand on him. The next thing I knew the second shot hit me. It hit me in the right arm."

"After he shot me I stepped back, faced him and said: 'You shot me, what have I ever done to you?' He kept coming and walked away. I saw the man distinctly before he fired the second shot. I didn't know who he was, but I knew he was the same one I knew before."

Running to the house, Rowe called to his brother, Earl, who let him in and called a doctor. The wounded man was removed to Allanton Hospital where he remained two weeks. Although the arm has healed, Rowe demonstrated to the court what little use of it he had. He was able to raise it only to a point at right angles to the elbow. He was able to twist the arm right around.

"Do you know who shot you?" asked Mr. White.

"It was the accused," Rowe replied.

Rowe stated that, in company with Inspector John Miller and William Stringer and P. C. John Kelly, he had gone to the Bradley farm, where Gordon was working in the field. "As Gordon Bradley walked toward the car I recognized him as the man who shot me," he testified.

Fall Executive Meeting Held

W. M. S. of Kingston Presbyterian Met This Friday

The fall executive meeting of the W.M.S. of Kingston Presbyterian Presbyterian Church in Canada was held at the home of Mrs. Mowatt, Kingston, on Friday afternoon, Nov. 6th. Delegates were present from Picton, Belleville, Kingston and Gananoque.

The meeting was opened with prayer by the President, Mrs. Reid and the minister of the summer's presbyterial held in Picton were read by the Recording Secretary, Miss Mowat.

A very comprehensive report of the provincial board meeting held in Toronto was given by Mrs. Reid. It is the report of the board that all legacies be given in to the legacy fund rather than to individual societies and also that all presbyterial offices should be held by visiting one auxiliary other than their own at least once a year. In order to curtail any necessary expense it was deemed advisable not to hold any special meeting for Easter Thank offering meetings.

Presbyterial reports were then heard and were on the whole gratifying. There were Trenton groups have been received; the sale of books and cards has been successful and the bales forwarded were of good quality and liberal in amount.

The treasurer reported the sum of $1585.30 having been sent to the provincial treasurer to date. Large sums from thank offering meetings were not included in this amount.

An invitation was extended Bayside to hold the presbyterial in St. Andrew's Church in Picton in the month of June 1932, the date to be decided upon later.

The meeting closed with prayer after which tea was served by the hostess.

FIRST DEER OF SEASON

Shot By Wm. Mattis West of Millbridge at the "Bullhead"

As far as is known, the first deer of the season was brought into Belleville late yesterday afternoon. The animal was shot west of Millbridge, at "The Bullhead," about 4 p.m. and Mr. Wm. Mattis, who left here Saturday morning, arrived here in the afternoon, and was fortunate in securing him the prize.

The animal was a lone buck and was run from the bush on to the road by the dogs in the party onto a run-way, where he was dispatched with five shots from rifles. Mr. Mattis declares claim it is the largest deer ever to come out of the west district, and when it is known that the buck was dressed weighed over 200 pounds, one can readily believe it. The head is a beautiful 9-point perfectly matched one, and Mr. Mattis expressed the with that some good taxidermist should secure it for mounting purposes. At present both the deer and the head are held at his home, and the venison has been distributed among some sixteen friends and relatives of the latter.

GOODS TAKEN FROM STORE

Norwood Store Broken Into Early Sunday Morning

The district office of the Ontario Provincial Police, Belleville, on Monday received a report from Provincial Constable Sylvester of the Peterboro detachment, stating that on Sunday afternoon he received a telephone message from County Constable Peffer of Norwood, advising that during Saturday night or early Sunday morning thieves entered the shoe store of P. F. Bowen, Norwood. Provincial Constable Sylvester, accompanied by Provincial Constable Wardell went at once to Norwood and found that entrance to the store had been gained by breaking a glass in the rear door. The safe, which was unlocked, had been ransacked and the papers, which were its only contents were scattered on the floor. An inventory of missing goods was taken and the loss is said to amount to $280.70. The police are actively engaged in investigating the burglary.

Dempsey is Coming East

Manassa Mauler Will Be Given Choice of Four Bouts

NEW YORK, Nov. 10. — Jack Dempsey's futile future probably will be settled definitely here Tuesday when Manassa Mauler comes here next week for a conference with Jimmy Johnston, head of Madison Square Garden's boxing department.

If Dempsey, who is forty-one years old, decided that his barn-storming tour has put him in condition for another comeback, Johnston is prepared to offer him two matches which might lead to a "shot" at Max Schmeling in the heavyweight championship.

Johnston said the Garden would not offer Jack any guarantee but an adequate share of the receipts in a bout in February at Miami, Fla., against an opponent drawn from a list of four leading heavyweights—Tommy Loughran, Phildelphia; Paulino Uzcudun and Tom Heeney, Hoboken, and Uzcudun, who are matched in a ten rounder in the garden Friday Friday night, already have offered to sign blank contracts for a Dempsey match, donating their shares to unemployment relief.

If Dempsey makes a good showing in this match, Johnston is prepared to match him against Jack Sharkey here in April or early in May. There is some doubt whether Sharkey would accept such a match, Sharkey already feels that by his showing against Carnera he is entitled to another chance at the heavyweight title.

Figuring that the Sharkey-Dempsey match could be made and a return bout with Schmeling arranged for September.

Boy, the crowds that the theatre gets on Monday nights. Whoever invented the idea of putting on free gift night made a lot of dough for himself—and a lot of others.

And what a break that guy in the post office got the other day when he went in to post a letter. Got a wad of jack in an envelope about addressed to hear the Armouries. Did that young lady comin blondy went she stumbled over one of the humps the other night?

And that talk about the Way Memorial is still getting stronger. The "Vets" say Belleville is the only place that hasn't one.

What freaks some reporters get. Stand at the fire hall for half an hour and ask a fellow, and haven't been gone two minutes when dinky thing goes the fire carts.

Amos 'n' Andy jokes are getting thicker than Lizzie Austin grips. That day light in the pool room the other night created more customers than ever had since the place was opened. And there wasn't much room to spare, either, do tell you.

Radios selling at $39.50. Used to pay almost that much for a couple of tubes a few years ago. Wonder how many crystal sets there are in Belleville.

That nine little doggie the paper mentioned the other night had about forty-four tails (that is) to the fire hall after him. And more fun-chaser than a dog could handle. The owner finally got him though; and was he tickled.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Tomorrow the thoughts of all will turn for a time from the material as the memory of the dead of the Great War is honoured in ceremonial, in church service, and in the hearts of bereaved parents, widows and orphans. The glory of the war we realize was not so much in the daring deeds which were outstanding as in the heroism with which was met deadly routine which only brave hearts could endure.

Celebrations of war's end is not the same in the course of the Great War as it was with other wars when there was nothing but rejoicing. The world knows too well, it has come to learn, what this carnage meant in the destruction of mind and body, to forget it. In old times wars were fought with mercenary troops as auxiliary forces or with small armies. In the last war entire nations that were fit went to the front—the blow was felt by everyone, the cost is yet being paid.

No other war has so shown the folly of war. Those who are the strongest advocates of peace are those who would keep very much before the minds of the people what the Great War cost in blood and health.

Remembrance Day has many points to commend it. It pays tribute to the glorious dead who performed what many will never have a chance to do, give their all for their country. It makes war so terrible a thing that its memory must be kept alive so that the evils of armed conflict may never be forgotten.

It is tragic to recall that with this loss and sacrifice even before the world in the thousand ills from which the entire world is still suffering, nations are spending more today for war than they were when the war broke out.

In the symbol of the sacrifices which were made, the individual cannot be forgotten. If he were then the remembrance would be largely in vain, for the sadness of war is to have known men and boys who paid the supreme sacrifice. Every city, every village, every hamlet, every concession knows these individual heroic deeds, the memory of these which so affects the world today. They are individuals as well as symbols of war's awful cost.

Their spirits must yet be the champions which will guide forward in other spheres than war. While they kept alive the spirit of patriotism, they stand as memorials that there is something greater than the material and wealth. They accepted as small price in payment of their death—the knowledge that their loved and those at home were safe. They have passed into the guideposts, leading our civilization forward to a better world state, it is to be hoped, which will know not war, a world in which man will have to go through the agonies of this last conflict. That was why they fought to the death and gave themselves up.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH

The difference between general sympathy and personal insight into a real case of need does not require to be pointed out. Every reader knows it. In the special days and seasonal times more potent to enlist the sympathy and action than a vague generalization of the wants of the needy of the city.

A writer of this paper saw a particular case of the needy the other day. He came away somewhat convinced that the stark want existed there.

The trouble with so much of the vague generalizing about want is that the personal experience has not been injected into the attitude, the viewpoint is theological but is distinct. Those who have been engaged in relief work know that every case of relief has its own individuality; they know each case is a study on its own condition. Hazy knowledge, not that of the first hand, bulks all cases together—the personal, the individual is lost in the mass. Church workers have had a very fine opportunity to delve into the problems from the standpoint of the individual with the result that church givings have always been generous and have been welcomed because the aid provided also carried with it the goodwill of the givers.

This relief work is one calling for the enlistment of workers at all times. The need is not just of one season, though it is emphasized more today than in better times.

The need of the present calls for the enlistment of those anxious to take a part in doing their fellowmen good. One may secure an insight in such a time which will forever make him a champion of the distressed—a worth-while motive to have directing one's life.

An aerial giant has been planned to transport one hundred and twenty people across the Atlantic from Britain into Canada, the British Air Ministry supporting the scheme. Other giant machines are under consideration to link the empire. Britishers intend to knit the world-flung empire in still firmer bonds.

JUST KNOWING YOU CAN

By Aline Michaelis

Just knowing you can play a mighty share
In the dreams you dream and the deeds you dare,
For this knowledge of power is the greater part
Of the courage that wells in the hopeful heart.

Just be able to say (and to know it is true)
"I can", and your project is half-way through!

Just knowing you can, what a glow it brings,
What a joy in the being stirs and sings,
As the feeling of strength and the will to do
In triumph goes coursing your pulses through!

Why, no chance and no change can conquer the man
Who sets out on his labors just knowing he can!

A SMART NATION

The North Bay Nugget observes that it does not do any harm to reflect on what Canadians have done for the world and the achievements of Canadians in various lines of endeavour. Without doing very much of what might be considered "Blowing your own horn" The Nugget has compiled a list of the achievements of Canadians which have been of great value to the world. Here is the list:

Canada built and demonstrated the first sleeping cars.

Built and sent the first steamboat across the Atlantic.

Gave the world the idea of the all-electric radio.

Originated the idea of making paper from pulpwood.

First isolated helium gas in commercial quantities.

Originated the idea of panoramic camera.

Originated the idea of electric heating.

Built the world's first electric stove.

Originated Marquis and other more recent wheats, which helped to build up the commerce of the West both in Canada and the United States.

The idea of the telephone originated in Canada, and the first long-distance trials of the instrument were made in Ontario between Paris, Ont., and Brantford.

Canada pioneered in the field of electro chemistry with the discovery of calcium carbide by Tom Willdin, of Hamilton.

Canada originated the idea of standard time, which has been adopted by every civilized country in the world.

A Canadian physician, Dr. F. G. Banting, discovered insulin, a serum for the treatment of diabetes.

Canada built and demonstrated the first successful steam engine in the history of the world. The effect of this invention was the doom of the sailing ship as a factor in ocean commerce.

The list could possibly be extended, but that suffices to establish the point, that Canada is an increasingly important unit in the progress of the world, and that Canadians should feel proud of their nationality.

NOVEMBER GREY

Nature is full of paradox. This is part of our own salvation. In an old woodcut attached to Hone's "Book of Days," the artist depicts November as a bedraggled trailer of forlorn items handled in a jagged and pendant bough, which branches of foliage is diverted and combined into the shape of a fat porker hanging none the less appetizing for all free. You have to glance steadily to catch this tragedy with its comic image. It is a rough conception, yet quite effectual enough to set the mind at that timely oddly set and variously distributed through an interchange of contraries and backward law that inclines them to the more benign extreme. And there is no warrant nor justification for our maligning this remembered month of November Grey. For if, as Pliny of Cotton Grey, the wise man he goes adown the fog-girt valley he plucks blackberry and hip, and we can be sure that he also stuffs them in his wallet with good intent and for good purpose. Examine any branchlet. It is a sermon upon the law of equivalents and of compensation. In a thousand and one November seeds for April. We have to thank the grey-haired Autumn for things good, but chiefly for the hint that the eleventh-hour depression is but a mood "slip" that holds the seeds of future harvest. What better name for the day could be given us?—Montreal Gazette.

13 YEARS AFTER

The old prophet dreamed of peace, of the time when the nations would beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks, and with strong practical sense they assigned the condition—the only possible condition—for the fulfilment of their hope, reach fulfilment. It was to find realization when the people would walk everywhere in the name of his God. Was this dream a phantasy? The answer is in the negative. The truth from God once dropped into the seedbed of the human heart will prosper; all the efforts of men and devil cannot destroy it. Until men will forget self entirely and work for the common good and for the life of their neighbor there will by upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, men's hearts failing for fear and looking for those things which are coming on the earth. Canada built and demonstrated the first sleeping cars.

SHE HAD TO CRAWL TO BED

One stair at a time—on her hands and knees. That was how she had to do it. And when she did get to bed, trembling from head to foot.

"Twelve months ago I could not sleep on account of the terrible pains in my stomach, and I had to eat pastels. At night I could only crawl up to bed, one stair at a time. But since taking Kruschen Salts regularly, I have entirely lost all pains and suffering, and, if needed, could now run upstairs and down at will. And now I feel 10 years younger. I shall never be without Kruschen Salts in the house."

Do you realize what causes rheumatism? Nothing but sharp-edged uric acid crystals which form as the result of clogged eliminating organs. Kruschen Salts can always be counted upon to clear away these acid crystals from the system. The six ingredients in Kruschen are found in almost every kitchen of this country. And more: They ensure such perfect internal cleanliness that no such body poisons as uric acid are ever able to accumulate again. Save yourself by buying a bottle of Kruschen.

INDIAN SUMMER

Indian summer is always an uncertain quantity in any year; it cannot be depended on for putting in an appearance at all; sometimes it makes its debut in October; and then again, it may not show up till November. The mail we get chronicles this elusive spasm of weather is to make note of it after it has come and gone. Sunday last, however, was ushered in with weather bureau forecasts announcing Indian summer and this has continued to-day. Yesterday's forecast for a continuation of the two days past, that giving a cool night, but that's peculiar to the Indian summer, has not prevailed, however, autumnal happenings are noted by Toronto journalists as occurring in that city in keeping with other horeabouts were however rather frustrated as it is having been the real thing. Reluctance to be in error with regard to the matter is to say whether or not this is really Indian summer, but this morning's balmy, enervating atmosphere leaves little doubt but that this is what it is—a last real touch of mild radio. Own Preparation Did Not Work Whee Bit

HARRISMITH, South Africa — (By the Canadian Press) — There was young in the district after the death of Mapedi, an old native witch-doctor who lived on a farm in this part of the Orange Free State. For fifteen years Mapedi had treated sufferers from snake bites with a preparation, the secret of one of the ingredients of which was mole fat. It is claimed he had cured scores of cases.

While digging out a mole hole he saw a tempting tail lost in the sand and, thinking it was caused by a snake, he made a grab, only to find it was a large ringhole snake, which bit him on the wrist. He rushed home and after making an incision, applied some of his own preparation, but five minutes later he was dead.

BOOK REVIEW

"A TANGLED WEBB"

Those who have grown up with Miss Kaye Dacre's delightful love adventures of this very lovable little girl through the chapters of "Anne of Green Gables," "Anne of Avonlea," and the others, will welcome the latest book from the pen of the gifted author, Mrs. L. M. Montgomery. Here indeed is a worthy successor to her earlier works, as refreshing as any of her novels, but their naive air replaced by a dash of sailing that makes the newer volume "A Tangled Webb" almost unlike any in Mrs. Montgomery's fervent admirers.

"A Tangled Webb" follows the modern trend towards family histories. Into the few months that its action occupies there is much of the past of the Clan Dark, related in such a way, however, that it is not as confusing to the reader as chronologies are apt to be.

The story of "A Tangled Web" centres about the ugly old Dark mansion, considered an heirloom by generations of Darks, and the only source of the estate of Aunt Becky Dark that is really coveted by relatives. Aunt Becky Dark, it is reservedly admitted, is the head of the Dark Clan, and the subject's character portrayal of this awesome old lady is vivid and clear cut.

Aunt Becky's "Company was never Mrs. Montgomery's best effort. One endured the digs and slams one got oneself for the fun of seeing other people writhing under their digs and slams." Aunt Becky Publishers.)

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was reading a magazine and all of a sudden she throwed it away. Such a story, it couldent be no more ridiculous. Anybody with a half an ounce of brains could write a better story than that. I could, I myself, she said.

Then why dont you? I said, and pup said, A creative thurst is the first step in the direction of fiction if its not promptly acted on.

Well, one more time and I'll write one of my stories and show up some of these over paged short story writers.

Thats just what I bleeve I'll do, Ill start right in now, I said in other words before the ideer gets out of my head.

And she went to her desk and I went to mine. Then she stopped writing. How much paper do you intagine it will take, Willyum, do you think a ream will be sufficient?

Are you going to write a short story or a novel? she inquired scornful and said, Just a short story of about 5000 words. That will be plenty to start with, at least. The start of a new author is the most important part, because editors have a feeling that if a reader dusnt like the start of a story he proberly wont finish the story, I said.

Naturelly, ma said. And she went back to her writing and I put my head and bite on the end of her pen holder, and then I sat over and stood alongside of her to see how much she was going to begin, and she started to write another story like the last times and then dident, and after I had read a few princes a brother, King Carol, was reported here yesterday.

The mayor of the village of Tothan, near Buzeu, was compelled by the prince to perform the ceremony Sunday the reports said.

As soon as the king learned of the marriage, it was added, he ordered all records of the ceremony destroyed and the Bucharest Government issued a denial that any marriage had occurred.

Letters to The Editor

REPLY TO "JUSTICE AND FAIR PLAY"

Editor Ontario-Intelligencer:

I am not in the habit of replying to any letter under an assumed name but I would like to call the attention of the writer of the letter which appeared in the press last night.

It states that the following incidents: Point Anne Cement Company, the Alemite, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company are located in the township of Thurlow. Quite true the Point Anne Cement works and the Canadian Industrial Alcohol and the round house are, but I must inform the writer that the Alemite is incorporated in the city of Belleville.

Regarding helping the unemployed, let me make that clear, any residents of Belleville working outside of Belleville in any of the above mentioned places or other places are considered Belleville people and will be taken care of, if necessary, by the Relief Committee.

Belleville is working under the same law than other municipalities in the Province of Ontario are, including Thurlow. Each municipality is expected to take care of their own unemployed. Thurlow is one of the wealthiest townships in the county and their reeve, deputy reeve and council are well able to manage their own affairs without any dictation from Belleville and so far as I am concerned, I do not intend to dictate to the township of Thurlow regarding their unemployed or any other matter.

Thanking you for this space.

Ewen States Communists Bound to Defend Soviet Where War is Involved

Witness in Trial Asserts Law of the Soviet as Applied to Canada

OTHER EVIDENCE

Recent Strike at Estevan Was Attended By Ewen

TORONTO, Ont. Nov. 10.—"The Communist party of Canada denies the right of anyone to interfere with its demonstrations—including the police. And in the event of war between Canada and Soviet Russia, the Communists would be obliged as Communists, to defend the Soviet, no matter who was to blame." These were the statements of Tom Ewen, alleged Communist leader, on the witness stand at County of York fall assizes yesterday.

Ewen with eight others, is being tried on charges of being and acting as members of an unlawful association and with being party to a seditious conspiracy. He was being cross-examined by Norman Bonnerville, K.C., Crown Prosecutor.

Ewen told of the appointment of a new editor to the Sudbury Finnish paper, Vapaus, because the newspaper failed to carry out the opinions of the "fraction" of the Communist party among the Finnish organizations. He denied the Communist party controlled the newspaper, but admitted the editor had been changed after a telegram had been received from Tim Buck, who was then in Moscow.

The witness was also secretary of the Workers' Unity League in addition to being a member of the party, he declared, and outlined the steps he had taken to organize a "revolutionary mine workers' union" in Alberta and Nova Scotia. The international committee for revolutionary miners in Moscow had written to him, giving instructions for the organization of the Canadian mine workers. The workers were to fight against the British Empire Steel Corporation.

Communists at Estevan

The Estevan strike in Saskatchewan which resulted in deaths of three persons, had also been attended by Ewen, he said. The league had sent out a call for pickets on that occasion "Annie Buller," and "Scarlett" had also been at Estevan while the strike was on, but they had not been sent by the Workers' Unity League, he declared.

Decisions of the political bureau of the Canadian party had been criticized as that by the internationale at Moscow, he declared in answer to counsel. "Why do you send your decisions to Moscow at all? Are you subject to their dictation and rule?" asked His Lordship.

"Because we are part of the organization. We make mistakes and they correct them," replied the witness.

Amos T. Hill, one of the accused testified briefly—before adjournment. He declared the party had never advocated the overthrow of the government by the use of force and violence, nor had it ever advocated physical force or other injury as a means of bringing about any social change.

ALBERTA COAL IS TESTED

Possibility of Obtaining Petroleum is Given in Report

Calgary, Alta., Nov. 10.—(By The Canadian Press)—Extensive tests of Alberta coal to ascertain in the possibility of obtaining petrol from the product have just been completed by Dr. W. H. Boomer, of the University of Alberta, his reports have been submitted to the research council at Edmonton. Samples of the coal have been sent to Vienna to be examined for petroleum.

Huge deposits of coal in this province are said to have high volatile content, suitable for use in large-sale petroleum production. Recovery of petroleum from low grades of Alberta coal by hydrogenation is possible but the present low price of petroleum from the well precludes economical competition, announced Dr. Boomer. Tests in Europe have also shown that the cost of producing petroleum from coal was too high to compete with the petroleum from the well.

Knot-Hole Gang Comes Into Being

Over 400 Boys Sign The Pledge to Uphold Clean Sport

Amid great enthusiasm the Y's Men Knot Hole Gang was formally organized on Saturday night in the Y.M.C.A. Upwards of 400 boys from 10 to 17 years of age filled the large assembly room to capacity, in fact the seating accomodation was totally inadequate and the Knot Holers overflowed on to the floor, platform and aisles.

While the invitation to attend was sent out to the 225 boys who were given cards during the baseball season, they were also given the privilege of bringing in their friends who desired to take part in the program sponsored by the Y's Mens Club. That such a desire is quite prevalent with the youth of Belleville, was evidenced by the very large attendance, and the Y's Men look forward to a wonderful season of activity as a result.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. A. E. Elliott, General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., and a member of the Y's Mens Club, who briefly explained to the boys the purpose of the gathering and the objects of the organization known as the Knot Hole Gang. It being the desire of the sponsors that the Gang shall be an entirely self governing and autonomous body, each item of organization was carefully considered and voted upon by the boys themselves.

The gathering unanimously endorsed as its official title "Belleville Y's Mens Knot Hole Gang," decided to bring in designs for an identification badge, and to give consideration to the choice of a slate of officers at its next meeting. Another item of importance is to be the selection of an official "Yell" or cheer—so that the Gang may make its presence known at all coming events. These matters will be decided at another regular meeting to take place Saturday, December 5th., at the same time and place.

The pledge to which all members subscribe themselves was unanimously endorsed by section and ordered by the meeting. Its principal clause is "I will uphold the principles of clean sport, clean speech, clean habits, and will stand with the rest of the Gang against cigarettes and profane language." Each member also agrees that his activities in the Gang shall at no time interfere with the wishes of his parents, his school duties or his obligation to his employer. The enforcing of these rules is to rest with the Gang itself, which is the principle behind the organization.

A program of motion pictures, educational and comic features was run with enthusiastic approval during Saturday's meeting and members of the Y's Mens Club who were interviewed by Chairman Shorti were given tremendous ovation. After the pictures the chairman gave a few instructions to fill out, relating to their hobbies, school, church etc, as the object of the evening meeting was to obtain information on which to base future programs and activities. As the assembly was of such large proportions it was found impossible to get all the forms filled out but those who did not supply this information are asked to drop into the Y.M.C.A. during the present week and it will receive their attention.

When the next meeting takes place on December Fifth, the information secured will have been analyzed and a program of sports, hobby and study groups worked out to suit the needs and desires of the Gang, and will be submitted for approval, as well as the adoption of an identifying emblem and an official colour. The Gang is desirous very much the whole hearted co-operation of all make suggestions, for the simple reason that if they do a decided influence in fostering a spirit of fair play and clean habits among the citizens of tomorrow. Any boy who did not attend this meeting and wishes to join the Gang by registering at the Y.M.C.A. and signing the simple pledge of membership. There are no dues or official obligations, or restrictions of any kind as to race, creed or colour.

CATTLE, HORSES BURN IN FIRE

Believe Pyromaniac at Work Again in Wentworth County

HAMILTON, Ont., Nov. 10.—Fire which wiped out a barn containing 25 cattle last night led to fears the alleged pyromaniac who terrorized Wentworth County farmers a few weeks ago had returned to this district. Along with the barn valued at $12,000, thirty-two head of pure-bred Holstein cattle were destroyed and five horses. Total loss, which included the season's crop of grain and hay was estimated at $22,000. A volunteer brigade helped to save the farmhouse, which was endangered by a strong wind.

WAITING WORD FROM THE WAR ZONE

Imperial Conference Will Meet in Canada Next Year

Arrangement Impossible Before Next July

THOMAS TO COME

London, Nov. 10—The next Imperial Economic Conference meets in Canada, probably in July. In the speech that will rank high among the historic utterances made at the annual Lord Mayor's Banquet, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald last night gave definite assurance that the National Government intends accepting the offer of the Canadian Government. But he decided that it would be impossible to hold the Conference before July, 1932. In the meantime Right Hon. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for the Dominions will visit Canada, Mr. Thomas' mission, declaring first-hand information, and sounding out the Governments on inter-trade policies.

"I think we all will agree with me that his well-known energy will help to the maximum result," was the tribute paid by the Prime Minister to his old Labor colleague and friend.

It was a brilliant scene. The Prime Minister was greeted by the assembled guests with enthusiastic cheers.

Mr. MacDonald further announced that:

1. The Government intends taking steps to stabilize the pound on a definite basis, which will make for greater certainty in normal movements or day-by-day transactions.

2. The Government proposes to do its utmost to assure success for the Disarmament Conference to be held in Geneva early in February.

3. When the new constitution is applied for India it must work. "It is no use giving to India a constitution that does not work. It must give internal peace to India," said the Prime Minister.

4. In view of the present position of Germany in relation to the rest of the world, it must have a speedy and complete overhauling and definite agreements should be reached which are tolerable and practical.

"For this, no time is to be lost," the Prime Minister proceeded, his voice touching a graver note. "A series of general and emphatic promises of purely temporary nature will not meet the circumstances. A long-term policy and its settlement is now required. All the world must make concessions, for the simple reason that if they do not the world will go from bad to worse until collapse and revolution may be the only way out."

There are hopeful signs of trade revival, proceeded Mr. MacDonald. Unemployment figures are down. The Government is faced with two great problems, "and by the leagues and I mean to solve them" —"the nation must balance its Budget, and the nation must balance its trade."

NO PERMITS

to spend $70,000 on relief work in the city during the winter under the government relief plan, to authorize the borrowing of $74,000.00 from the Bank of Montreal to pay expenses of the new lower bridge, to authorize the borrowing of $60,000.00 for the pavement on North Front Street and West Moira Street, a by-law was also passed authorizing the holding of the municipal elections, and to name the places of polling, the deputy returning officers and the poll clerks. Nomination Day will be held on November 30th and the election will be held on December 7th with the City Clerk, J. Wilfrid Holmes as Chief Returning Officer.

Daylight Saving Measure

In order that an expression of opinion may be had on the question of Daylight Saving for the city for the next two years a by-law will be put to the people on this question. The voters will be asked to register their franchise on the question, "Are you in favour of Daylight Saving for two years in the summer season beginning with the third Saturday in May and remaining in force until and including Labor Day?" The by-law as at first drafted did not have any specific dates, but Alderman Leonard asked if the council were going to insert the dates under which Daylight Saving would exist. As the by-law was prepared and all were passed unanimously by the council.

Ask Legal Opinion

A letter was received from the Belleville Committee of Architects, J. O. Hetty is the secretary, asking the council to pass two recommendations and to pass by-laws covering the same. The first was:

That a by-law should be passed and explicit instructions issued not to issue any permits for buildings or other permanent construction of any nature as laid out in the plan for the Esplanade, that would interfere with the carrying out of the construction of the proposed Esplanade," and secondly "That the city council should forward a letter duly signed by the Mayor to the property owners who have so generously offered to donate their holdings along the proposed route to the city and in these letters to suggest that the carrying out of the project, has merely been postponed and not definitely abandoned. This would, in the opinion of the committee go a long way to these offers and also show the appreciation of the council of the public spirit shown by these generous-minded property owners. Both recommendations were referred to the solicitor for the city with the request that he send all legal s's to do embodying both recommendations.

Report Received

The report of Gore, Nasmith and Storrie's Engineers on the specifications for duplicate water main was received and ordered filed. Specifications was accepted accordingly. Mr. J. Y. Austin manager of the Belleville waterworks was instructed by recommendation to secure prices and purchase the necessary pipe and materials for the laying out of the duplicate water main. The City Engineer was instructed to draw up plans and secure permission to cross under the C.N.R. tracks at Frank Street in order to give fire protection to residents living north of the C.N.R. tracks on Frank St. Alderman MacMillan explained to the council that he had inspected the proposition and thought it was the only feasible way to handle the situation. A railway cover will be constructed on Starling Street from Bleecker Street to the Railway Terrace under Section 8 of the Local Improvement Act. The engineering section by-law was ordered to be prepared for this work. This will be another unemployment relief that will bring relief to the unemployed during the winter months.

Application Received

An application was received from Fred Kennedy asking for the position of caretaker of the Market Square run by the city at the corner of Foster Avenue and Queen Street. The application was referred to the committee handling these applications for further consideration.

A number of the unemployed were present requesting that they be given work. The letter was turned back to the committee for discussion and action. Under the head of unfinished business, Alderman Tice asked "when the services of Gore, Nasmith and Storrie would cease on the new duplicate water main?"

Alderman Wolton explained to the alderman that he believed the firm was hired as consulting engineers on the project and that they would remain regular engineer's fees until completion. This closed the business of the council and the members adjourned till the next regular meeting or the call of his Worship, the Mayor. All members of the council were present at the session.

OUTLAWS OF EDEN

by Peter B. Kyne

INSTALMENT XVII

The power of Silas Bahson in Valley Centre was very apparent to Nate Tichenor when, having called Amos Towle, who combined with harness and saddlery and money-lending, to the office of local justice of the peace, he was informed that Bahson had sworn to a warrant charging Joe Brainerd with assault and battery, malicious mischief and disturbing the peace, and that bail had been set at one thousand dollars in each case.

"Better lower it, Judge," Tichenor suggested unkindly.

"That feller," his honor replied, with slap in his accent's fall-down to somebody hands me three thousand.'

"Orders from headquarters, I suppose, judge."

"You think' to git yourself into jail for contempt o' court?"

"Nate Tichenor don't lawing desk.

"Yes, I am. And what art you going to do about it, you mis'able counterfeiter?" You not holding court now, are you? The limit of fool to be set in such cases is five hundred dollars on each charge. Here's fifteen hundred dollars, and you take it and give me an order on Bill Rooney to release Joe Brainerd, or I'll go over to the jail, hog-tie Rooney and take Joe Brainerd out o' jail myself."

Probably no man in Forlorn Valley knew half as much law than this village justice of the peace; but he had heard of the Brainerd clan and here was the last of that tribe of litters glaring at him so ferociously his honor trembled. "Well rather Shan git into a row with you, young feller, an' have to kill you in self-defense," he decided. "I'll set the bail at the minimum figger. Case comes up for trial at ten o'clock tomorrow."

"If you're scheming to send Joe Brainerd up for six months without the alternative of a fine I'd advise you to change your mind. And how is that for contempt of court?"

The case was called at ten and Bill Rooney—well, I hold an ancient grudge against that bill school I used to carry a gun for Gwen Kershaw. The teacher found it out and took the gun away, who ordered me to leave it home. I refused because I thought I couldn't afford to risk obedience in those days; so the principal told Bill Rooney on me. Bill was the night watchman then, so he pinched the book and gun away from me and gave me a first-class thrashing. I hesitate at using reprisals until I should be older and, stronger, when I planned to give Bill a thrashing with his own belt. Today was my first opportunity."

"Your clan had a reputation for cold-blooded courage and ferocity, Hale—and still has, for that matter. So to day you've a hero in Forlorn Valley, but when you organize to deprive this valley of the water from Eden Valley creek you're going to be the most hated man in this county."

"But I'm not going to deprive Forlorn Valley of Eden Valley water I've assured you of that already."

"I don't believe it," he'll say to, if not for your own sake than for the sake of Larry Kershaw. I'm going to let you in on a secret—now that Kershaw is dead. He plans, after organizing the irrigation district, to dam Eden Valley Creek at the head of the Handle, up in the mountains, and divert the water west through the public domain and down to a natural reservoir in Eden Valley, and he expects, thereby, to deprive Forlorn Valley of its water. That would be silly of Forlorn Valley to tap the stream up in the Handle, for that would be public land and it is to my interest to see the public lands of Larry Kershaw and I, with our ranches up against them, that way Mine property without due process of law and adequate compensation. Hence, I am sure you will agree with me that such a procedure as Kershaw plans is unconstitutional.

"Now, if this is done the valley of our ranches will be very much depleted before we will be, and I have studied the natural irrigation of a great many thousand acres of this meadow land and the constitution of the United States guarantees me adequate compensation and appropriation of their property without due process of law and adequate compensation. Hence, I am sure you will agree with me that such a procedure as Kershaw plans is unconstitutional.

"Now, I'm not going to start a water fight with the Eden Valley Irrigation District. I shall merely enter a formal protest—and when I use the first person singular I mean Miss Kershaw and the late Mr. Lard and Cattle Company. Then I shall sit quietly by and watch the water, which starts their lands, market the bonds and spend the money to erect a diversion dam and dig miles and miles of irrigation ditches—which is just as they are about to open their bond-gates I shall file a petition for injunction by the superior court restraining the district from using the water, and ordering it to show cause, within ten days, why any temporary injunction should not be made permanent. The case will then be tried on its merits and I shall probably lose in the superior court because the judge will refrain from questioning the constitutionality of the state law. I shall appeal and I shall win and when I have won the only legal salvation for Forlorn Valley will be to buy Eden Valley from Miss Kershaw at a fair treaty or via the condemnation route. It is water or no water it must buy our lands—and a jury will set the price.

"He hath taken down the mighty from their seat and hath exalted them of low degree." Cagan quoted humorously. "You appear to be practicing at a disadvantage."

"Just contemplate Forlorn Valley, the money received from the sale of the bonds all spent on a diversion dam, a ditch system, engineers, laterals engineering fees, salaries, and os forth suddenly discovering that there is no water in the water—that it's all dressed up with no place to go. Then you dwell in blissful ignorance of the catastrophe that befalls you and decide Miss Kershaw and me for protecting our water rights and the blow falls—"

"There will be stark drama and tragedy in that comedy Mr. Tichenor."

"I dare say,.....Well, now that I have had my own ideas on the legality of my position confirmed by such eminent water counsel as Brainerd, it would seem that all I can do is sit calmly by and watch Forlorn Valley ruin itself."

"But surely, Mr. Tichenor," Cagan protested, "you will take some measures to warn these people before they embark on such a ruinous enterprise."

"Notwithstanding the fact that it would be very bad business for me to do that, I shall do it. It will be a case of love's labor lost, however. The people will not believe me; they are following a false leader and blindly loyal to him... Well, here's your check for legal services to date. Something tells me I shall be retaining your services at a later date."

Returning home, Nate Tichenor was met at the railroad depot in Gold Run by his chauffeur with the car. Passing through Valley Centre enroute to Eden Valley he saw some interest that might be making a vacant store in the Bahson Block; knew the store a new line of goods the world that presently the Forlorn Valley citizen would have go to press.

Certainly Bahson was losing no time moving into action. Nor was Joe Brainerd, as Nate discovered when he entered the office of the Register, hoping to glean news of interest that might be developing during his four days' absence. He found Brainerd writing a editorial cordially welcoming his competitor into the field.

"Going to press tomorrow with a four-page issue, Joe?" he enquired. "Practically all of my local advertising has been withdrawn."

"Why not run the cancelled ads in the same, Joe? If I were you I would decline to let Bahson secure hostility for a week. He may think his slaves 've not obeyed instructions and start a fight with them in consequence. If anybody cancels his advertisement, you're not needing him the paper as usual. I'll take care of your deficit. When I'm fighting for the Right I'm always living up to our agreement, boy, and making the public aware of my sacrifices".

"You'd be a traitor not to."

"Brainerd did prepare the editorial.

Nate related in detail his conversation with Cagan. Perhaps Brainerd suggested. "I'll do well to write a few editorials pointing out to the people the possibility of failure of the plan upon which Bill Rooney bases his hope to win his bark. What do the poor devils know about the Eden Valley water supply?"

"That's a splendid idea, Joe. The people will then have an opportunity to read your editorials and digest it before attending the mass meeting. Remember that I am to be favorably inclined toward the proposition; I shall have to make them think that I am for it. Your own editorial has been written and set up in print and ready for you, Mr. Bahson. It may give him food for thought."

Within two hours Brainerd sent, by messenger boy, a note with the proof and a note from Brainerd to the effect that he was withholding the editorial in his next issue and inviting criticism. After reading the editorial Bahson passed it to Henry Rookby for the latter's criticism.

"He asks for my comment, Henry Rookby," Bahson said. Rookby wrote in red crayon across the proof sheet: "Rotten," and filled its own reservoir filled you and Tichenor to the brim, proceeded to jump into it and drown yourselves. Signed: crafty judge, yours etc. S. Bahson."

"Shoot 'em in the foot" Mr. Rookby suggested.

When the bank's messenger took the proof and Bahson's message wrote in red crayon across the proof sheet: "Rotten," and filled its own reservoir filled you and Tichenor to the brim, proceeded to jump into it and drown yourselves. Signed: crafty judge, yours etc. S. Bahson."

FINANCIAL NEWS

GRAIN PRICES SETTLE DOWN

Pre-Holiday Profit-Taking Shows Itself

CHICAGO, Nov. 10 — All grain prices turned down early today, influenced by pre-holiday profit taking and by a let-up in aggressive speculative purchasing so conspicuous of late. Trade readjustment in advance of the United States Government's crop report due after the close, were also a bearish factor. Opening at 1 cent set-back to 1 cent gain, wheat later receded all around. Corn started 1-4 to 7-8-off and then continued to sag.

RAIL SHARES WHIP INTO LINE

Trading Continued Close to Saturday's Hectic Pace

MONTREAL, Que., Nov. 10.—The first sitting of the board of conciliation in the railway wage reduction dispute here on November 17, Dr. J. C. Hemmeon, the railway unions' representative on the board announced today.

"We have definitely fixed the date," Dr. Hemmeon said, "and we are now preparing the various documents that will be used in the inquiry." No official representatives of the railway companies here will argue the cause of the employees, Dr. Hemmeon said. Chairman and telegraphers.

The railways asked the move to consider a 10 per cent. wage cut. No suitable agreement was reached, so the appointment of a board of conciliation became necessary.

MINING STOCKS LOWER IN PRICE

Easier Tendency-Seen On Standard Exchange Board

TORONTO, Nov. 10.—(CC. P.)—Anticipated reaction set in today on the standard stock exchange after recent leaders showing recessions ranging from 12 cents to 5 points in active trading. Volume fell off on the decline, however and a firmer tone was in evidence around noon. Base metal and silver issues led under pressure of profit-taking, interlisted stocks providing the one factor to move counter. International nickel lost $1.00 of yesterday's gain and Noranda was down 80 to $20.50. Hollinger 70½ Gordon, a recent feature, reacted 15 to 20 points. Industrials and ventures were off a few cents apiece.

MART YIELDS PART OF GAIN

Little Likelihood Japan Going Off Gold Standard

New York, N.Y., Nov. 10.—The trading in foreign exchange yielded some of their sweeping gains, under pressure of profit-taking today.

Selling may have been hastened somewhat by the uncertainty over International affairs, as indicated by fresh talk of the Japanese bonds. The bond market reiterated, after advancing sharply for eight consecutive sessions and wheat reacted substantially.

In short, months for reports to generate a rally in the rail issues failed, as they did today, when several issues were off 2 points or so, including T. C. Steel Dupont, Chemical Products, General Foods, American Smelting, American Can, Westinghouse, Sears Roebuck and others. Losses of a point or so were numerous. There were only a few issues active selling, however, and the volume of trading was considerably. Rails gave up their morning gains, but held fairly well. Radio was also firm in response to its earnings statement.

Bankers with Japanese connections were inclined to regard the rise in the yen as bonds as resulting from ill-informed selling. They foresee little likelihood that Japan will be forced off the gold standard, or become greatly involved financially through the Manchurian situation.

U. S. Steel's unfilled tonnage statement, showing the slight sag of about 25,000 tons in October, was about in keeping with expectation. Wall Street had expected a slight decline, as most of the improved sentiment in the industry has appeared since the turn of the month, and has not as yet been translated in actual orders to any extent.

VICTORY SIXTH WINS

Lisbon Park, Eng., Nov. 10 (AP)—J. E. Widgery Victory VI ki-ddling nine to four today won the Elgham Maiden Plate at a mile and a quarter on the heights from Mr. Carens an dthree others. The purse was £119 (about $418).

See No Reason Why Conference is Delayed

Canberra, Australia, Nov. 10.—(CP-Cable via Reuters)—Nov. 10.—Minister J. H. Scullin today voiced the feeling of himself and the Government that the forthcoming Imperial economic conference at Ottawa should be held as soon as possible.

"The government feels the Imperial economic conference should be called at the earliest possible moment," he declared at the conclusion of today's cabinet meeting. "There should be no unnecessary delay. We see no reason why the conference should not be held early in the New Year."

NO DATE IS SET FOR DEPARTURE

Rt. Hon. Thomas Will Attend Conference at Ottawa

London, Nov. 10 (CP)—No date has been made today for the departure of Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for Dominions in the National Government who will tour the Dominions prior to the holding of an Imperial economic conference in Ottawa, probably next July.

In some circles it was suggested Mr. Thomas would leave around the middle of December, while other observers saw a mass of parliamentary business demanding his attention which would delay his departure until after the New Year.

The absence of any statement by the cabinet regarding the order in which it will tackle the urgent problems which confront it made room for fresh non-informed circles to guess at the probable time Mr. Thomas would be able to leave. It was thought parliament would probably be asked to hold a dumping measure to protect Scottish manufacturers and British internal trade.

BROCKVILLE GROWING

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Nov. 10—An increase of one hundred and thirty in the population of Brockville, announced in last year, is estimated by George Turner, assessor, in his annual report presented to the municipal council.

The population now stands at 9,615. The total assessment of the town amounts to $8,857,963, an increase of $180,065.

It is recorded that 1,500,000 pairs (or 2,500 tons) of rabbits are consumed annually by the citizens of Melbourne alone.

HEASMAN—In sad and loving memory of a dear wife and mother, who passed away a year ago, Nov. 9th.

One loved, missed, save in gracious household ways;
Not perfect, nay, but full of tender worth;
No angel, but a dearer being all on earth.

In angel instinct, breathing paradise;
Interpreter between the gods and man:
Who looked all native to her place and yet
On tiptoe seemed to touch upon a sphere
Too great to tread.

Euchre and Dance at St. Michaels

Proceeds Were Donated to Unemployment Relief

In St. Michael's Academy last evening a splendid crowd was present, one of the first entertainment given by the Holy Name Society of the church since its organization this fall, the occasion being a card party and dance for relief work in the city. The entertainment was held in connection with Unemployment and Relief Committee to which the proceeds will be donated.

Euchre was played during the evening and competition was keen. At the conclusion of the games, the president of the Holy Name Society, Mr. E. B. Lally, explaining the purpose of the party, introduced Mayor George A. Reid, who had kindly consented to present the prizes. Mayor Reid presided in a happy manner, complimenting the society on their co-operation with the local Relief Committee. The parishioners of St. Michael's, he said always been ready to identify themselves with civic enterprises, the entertainment last evening being a further proof of their eagerness to help in time of need.

The winners of the evening were: Ladies' first, Mrs. Baldree; second, Miss Freeman; consolation, Mrs. Smith; men's first, Mr. Stan Gorman; second, Mr. Bird; third, Leo Flagler.

A delicious lunch was served by members of the ladies' auxiliary, after which the remainder of the evening was devoted to dancing, with Chas. Goyer's orchestra in attendance.

Paris Styles Reveal Variety, Few Revisions

Paris. — Mid-season fashion opening shows a variety of materials and some innovations in color, rather than drastically revising the present styles. They feature guardsman blue and a deep red but tend to modify the brilliant shades of early fall. Rust, brown and navy are favored for the new short jacket and bolero suits.

Worth continues the 1830 evening silhouette, and Germaine Locomte uses a short back bustle and drapes faced with velvet. Large, sleeve puffs are very popular on evening dresses, and a new wide shoulder treatment is added by Lyviane.

Evening dresses bloom into brighter colors than the daytime clothes; and show an entertaining range of materials. Previous fashion indications are developed in the lines.

Lace forms the basis for many evening frocks. The most striking use of lace, however, is found in the hand-knit wool lace blouses featured by many houses, to be worn with the jakket suits.

Skirts remain long for the evening, with occasional exceptions. A change is found here and there in the rising back line. There is much emphasis on the back lines in both evening and afternoon clothes.

Heavy wool materials are being displayed for daytime use. Street dresses of wool with fur trimmed self scarfs and muffs are sponsored by Worth. Striped woods find important places in sports clothes, varying the monotone wools.

Splerged points add novelty of pattern to the evening dresses. A wool evening dress is introduced by a new house, Vera Borea. Marocain, silk crepe satin and georgette mingle in evening modes with the prevailing lace.

Worth's opening reveals a definite simplification of evening styles to meet economic conditions. Black is stressed at that house for both afternoon and evening. Pearls are worn with the black.

Dark brown sports clothes are widely endorced. Red and brown combination is also popular. With the introduction of the darker tone into a wide range of colors, the general fashion note for early winter months finds a basis of warm, deepening shades.

The Beauty Box

By Helen Pollett

Beauty fads and fashion frenzies are always with us. In the far past there were bustles, pantalettes, hoopskirts, waterfalls and what-nots. The wasp was followed by the straight front corset which was considered a step forward in perfection of figure. In our own days we have had the diminishing slouch, rolled stockings, abbreviated skirts, weeded eyebrows, pencilled hair, factory tresses, followed along by bra grams, flapper galls and the gun tan aberration. With all these pleasant diversions life would be a dull business.

Plexing the muscles of the arms is a simple, quick and effective exercise for shaking fat from human fins. Clinch the fingers tightly, draw the hand toward the shoulder, tightening the muscles of the upper arms; bring the arm above the head, still keeping muscles taunt. Drop to the side of the body, rest a moment, repeat. Ten cells don't settle on strong muscles. They pick out lazy, soft ones in their places.

When chin straps are worn for the purpose of tightening sagging tissues and urging the excess chin to be lonely, pads of cotton or gauze that have been dipped in skin astringent should be placed inside the straps. The astringent should be ice cold. The cotton pressing to steam another one must be applied. Witch hazel serves as an astringent, but alcohol and soothes the surface of the skin.

Dry, brittle hair requires daily brushing, which stimulates the sebaceous glands, coaxing them to oil the hair. Use lubricating shampoo guids. After the shampoo, rub an oily preparation on the scalp brilliantine, mineral oil, vaseline or any one of a great number of proprietary antiegics that are offered in beauty shops and drug stores.

A callous on the sole of the foot is caused by pressure. A change of shoes will bring relief. Soak the foot in warm soap suds, and rear away the hardened cuticle by stroking with pumice stone.

RECORD-BREAKER

Slashing thirty-five hours from the previous record, Peggy Salaman, 19-year-old British society girl, landed in Cape Town, South Africa, completing a flight from England in 6½ days. Miss Salaman's co-pilot was Captain Donald Stone. The young girl became interested in flying only a year ago, when she tired of the social whirl of London. Note the tropical suit the happy aviatrix is wearing.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR CHURCHES

Heads of All Denominations Ready to Co-Operate

Halifax, Nov. 10—A special day of prayer for the relief of unemployment and attendant distress brought about by depressed economic conditions has been appointed by the House of Bishops of the Church of England in Canada, and approved by Rev. Dr. R. H. Oliver, general secretary of the United Church in Canada, and by Rev. E. H. Cochrane, President of the Maritime Baptist convention. Replies had not been received as yet from the heads of other denominations. His Grace Archbishop Clare G. Worrell, Primate of all Canada, said last night, but he was hopeful that the day appointed, Wednesday, Dec. 2, would be observed as a general day of prayer throughout the churches of Canada.

THE TWO ROADS

When he was young and days were full and bright,
He came through every kind of youthful fight
By willing well.
No prailing word his many friends would speak,
But someone came and whispered he was weak,
And so he fell.

When he was frail and bled by sorrow's pain
And shunned the fight and would not face again
A hill so long,
There came a voice, as if from hopeless grave,
That called him strong and said that he was brave
And he was strong.

TEACH CHILD TO REASON

By Constance Cameron

The child is never too young who truly enjoys thinking for her child. It feels her sensitive to feel that the child cannot make decisions without her. Yet, there is the little girl, unwilling toys with which it is a pleasure to watch as she trains her child to use her growth thinking apparatus.

Observe the privilege of observing a mother of the latter type and she would speak to her child about the baths of reasoning so casually, so easily that it is a long time before the child cannot make decisions without her. Yet, there is the little girl, unwilling toys with which it is a pleasure to watch as she trains her child to use her growth thinking apparatus.

DIME 'CUPPA COFFEE' CAUSES SMALL RIOT

TORONTO, Nov. 10 (CP) — The trouble started when mounted policeman Harvey tried to arrest Dan Donnelly.

Dan wanted a dime for a "cuppa coffee," police say. Receiving "no" for an answer when he queried a Hydro official, Dan became annoyed. He is said to have grabbed at a handful of bills in the official's hand. "Then Harvey came to the scene.

But Dan refused to submit quietly to arrest. He kicked the officer in the shins, reports say. Robert Ross decided Harvey needed help. He joined the group. Kenneth Smith made up his mind Ross had no business interfering. He is said to have waded in and pasted Ross on the jaw.

But order emerged out of chaos. Harvey got the handcuffs on Donnelly, and charged him with vagrancy and assaulting a constable. He arrested Smith on a charge of obstructing a police officer and aggravated assault.

The policeman marched his victims to the station, bystanders disappeared and peace reigned again.

Electricity Raises Living Standard on Ontario Farms

Hon. Robert Cook Talks To Rotary on Farm Problems

FARM DAY

One hundred residents of the rural district surrounding Belleville fraternized with their city brethren today at the Hotel Quinte, the occasion being the annual Farmer's Day of the Belleville Rotary Club. The event was very interesting and the seventy-five or more Rotarians present made ideal hosts. Community singing led by J. Arnold Thomson prepped up the proceedings and the songs under the chairmanship of Rotarian Cook were applauded with several solo numbers ably assisted by the Rotary orchestra. President Tom Webster occupied the chair, and the guest of the day was Hon. J. R. Cook, member of the Ontario Cabinet and Minister of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario. He was introduced by Rotarian McGie and Rotary appreciation for his very interesting and instructive address was ably voiced by R. Y. Hisey.

Not one dollar of investment is asked by the Ontario Government or Hydro Power Commission in rural sections for electric service, said Hon. Mr. Cooke, who went on to explain why rural and urban customers of Hydro were treated differently from the city and why the two services are not comparable as to local application. The rural must pay full cost and interest for hydro systems the country pays only one half of the cost of distribution being made a free gift of the other half by the province. Urban investment of fourteen million dollars in rural electric service in the past eight years the country systems has made the equity of nine million dollars, in power distribution lines practically a free gift from the municipalities.

Why does the government boost rural electric installations? The prosperity of the nation depends upon the prosperity of the agricultural sections, and the more attractive and the more profitable the more the drift of population from the farms to the city will be checked. Expenditures for schools and highways are always greater in the country than in the cities and towns, for the same reason.

Drift To Cities

This drift to the cities from the farm is one of the problems of the day and is common to all countries throughout the world. In 1919 when the second Farmer Government came into power, by-election in Brockville was one of the first taken up and a committee of five appointed to enquire into the reason for the drift to the cities from the farms and report possible means to combat it. Hon. Mr. Cooke was a member of that committee which consisted of one Conservative, one Liberal, and three Labor members. Enquiries were extended over most of the states of the U.S.A. and many remarkable facts were disclosed bearing on the effort to check the drift from farm to city. In Michigan in 1918 there were 200,000 abandoned farms. In 1919 there were 18,000, and this is a time when prices for farm products were high. There were 1,100,000 acres left idle, and 50,000 persons left the country for the towns and cities in that state. In New England conditions and conditions were found. In Texas the federated farm bureaus recommended that the state establish small industries in the rural country, just enough acreage to be handled easily by one family, build a good house and have all the conveniences and install worthy families in them in an effort to stem the tide back to the farm. Why? Because the farms are the basis of the life of the state as well as the nation.

Higher Standard of Living

The Anglo-Saxon craving for a higher standard of living is largely responsible for the drift from farm to city, and not low prices for farm products or anything like that, for the drift has been more pronounced in the years when prices for farm products were high. The cause is the environment, long hours of work and monotony of existence, lonesomeness, lack of conveniences and lack of facilities for secondary education. Many come to the city to give the children better education, and the wives more home comforts and conveniences than the country can afford and this includes electric light and electric utensils for many domestic easy and interesting.

In the city wealth is concentrated, say five million dollars a mile in towns while in Toronto twenty-five million dollars a mile is the estimate. In the country $50,000 a mile would be a fair estimate. The assessment value in the city is one hundred times greater than in the country, consequently the country can not hope to keep up with the city in educational facilities and other necessities. Tremendous taxation would be necessary to maintain it. Hence if people are going to be kept on the farm some conveniences must be granted them, such as increased grants for schools and rural electric lines at the lowest possible cost.

Six Miles a Day

In October, 1922, eight years ago the first agreement was made on a policy of provincial bonusing of rural electric lines, $433,000. Then the Legislature doubled that amount, and this stimulated the demand for electric service in the rural sections. Only three hundred miles of rural electric lines were in operation previous to 1921 and these were mostly in close proximity to urban centres. In 1924, 154 miles of electric service were constructed, 250 in 1925, 750 in 1926, 900 in 1927, 1400 in 1928 and 1695 in 1929. Six miles of rural electric service were completed every working day in 1930, which shows that the increasing demand for rural electric service is being fully met by the Commission. Seven thousand miles of rural electric service have been constructed, with 50,000 rural customers now being served by Hydro. All this means work for those who might otherwise be workless in taking out the timber needed, in the making of brackets and installing. Fourteen million dollars expended on rural hydro service in the past eight years read of that there is nine million dollars of paid up capital earning a return on hydro services.

Comparisons are sometimes made of rural and urban charges for electric service. These are quite different things and not comparable. In the city there are about one hundred customers to a mile. In the country three customers in the country were charged on the same basis as the city customer, the charge would be enormous. The Legislature has fixed a minimum price of $2.50 for carrying charges in the country where there are five customers to a mile. So the people, has the rural service come that even with this minimum price charges last year the deficit was only $85,000 which was charged to consolidated account.

The farmer has more uses for electricity than the city customer who uses it only for house lighting. On the farm it can be used for lighting the farm buildings as well as the house, power for milking machines, separators, pumps, grain grinders etc. A farmer with fifty head of cattle can get power for that he formerly had worse at an expenditure of not more than twenty cents a head, and who ever dreamed of a service as cheap as that.

No other country in the world is giving or contemplating rural electric service on such favorable terms, low rate as obtains in Ontario.

SUCCEEDS IN SAVING ENTIRE FAMILY

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 10—(By The Canadian Press)—Housed by the moaning of one of his children and finding his home in flames, Joseph early today. Carlyle Newman succeeded in dragging his half unconscious wife, and five children to the sloping roof of the front porch. He then summoned firemen who arrived in time to rescue the family to safety before the house was destroyed.

After a year's unemployment, Newman had recently found work and was looking forward to the winter with confidence.

Mexico City, Nov. 10—(AP)—Mexico may abandon her navy under an efficiency programme soon to be put into effect, it is learned of War Plutarco Elias Calles.

The preliminary report indicates General Calles is dissatisfied with the navy and aviation under the national defense system, an directs that unless they can be made efficient heats they should be abandoned.

In Agony from Sheer Weakness

Mrs. Spurgeon Dawson firmly believes she would not be here today if she had not taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. (Ionic)

"When my children were small," writes Mrs. Spurgeon Dawson, Wolverton, Ont., "I was so weak and run down I could not walk across the floor without fainting. Even the slightest exertion was too much. Days were spent in agony from sheer weakness, and nights were made fearful through sleepless hours.

"It seemed as if nothing whatever would help me . . . Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were recommended, and after taking twelve boxes I found strength returning and my stomach able to handle food again. I had not known what a real rest was for months."

What would you give to be able to cast aside your weakness and substitute vigorous physical strength? That is exactly what many men and women have been enabled to do by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (Ionic).

The iron and other elements in these tonic pills increase the amount of haemoglobin or oxygen-carrying agent in the blood. The increased supply of oxygen makes bladder fit all your tissues.

Just as a draft of fresh air kindles a fire. The result is a better appetite, a feeling of well-being, restful sleep, and ability to do your work happily.

Get a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Take them faithfully. Don't look for immediate results. Sometimes the beneficial results come almost at once but always, they give this tonic a fair trial and you will be rewarded—just as other Canadian men and women have been rewarded. 50 cents a package. 22

SHRUBS BRIGHTEN THE RECESS HOUR

Halifax, N.S.—Increased interest in the planting of shrubs and trees on school playgrounds, as encouraged by the Department of Education, has resulted in a planting programme being under-taken in more than 300 village and rural schools during the past year. Officials of the department say that during 1931 certain schools in the shrubbery was evidenced by fully four-fifths of the schools, although a great advance in the last two years.

The Department views the beautification of grounds as an advance step and Superintendent Dr. Henry H. Munro intends continued emphasis on its subject. Schools undertaking a fairly extensive planting may be visited by a staff member of the Rural Education Division, who assists in the choice and plan of action on the subsequent care of plants. The department bears one-half the cost of shrubs.

Small Electric Systems Pass Into Control of Strong Companies

NO COMMENT

Proposal to Merge Creates Considerable Excitement

HALIFAX, N. S. — (By the Canadian Press) — For several years the systems of distributing electric power in Nova Scotia have been undergoing changes as hydro-electric power projects, including Aylesford, South Berwick, Waterville and Shubenacadie, Merriton, Grafton, Nova Scotia Light and Power Company, controlled by Royal Securities, secured controlling interest in a group including Oxford Co. Edison, Chester, Barrington and Sackville companies. That was interesting, as was the announcement between Barrington Electric and Western Power Co. in the province over the right to serve a certain section of Yarmouth County. It was interesting, too, when Nova Scotia Light and Power secured control of the Avon River Power Company.

But when a proposal to merge the interests of companies was made by Mr. Stanley Knight that up to take notice. Recently the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company put before the Public Utilities Commission application for approval of a merger of their company and the Avon River company. This would bring the two with the Oxford Electric, Springhill Electric, Tantramar Co., and Electric and Sackville River Electric.

Hearing of the application opened on Tuesday morning and continued that day and the next, when it was adjourned until December 1st when the City of Halifax will come to investigate the proposal. There was a strong array of legal talent and argument going. J. McG. Stewart, K.C., and C. B. Smith, K.C., represented the company; F. Mathers, K.C., deputy attorney general, was solicitor for the utilities commission; A. Lenox, K.C., and P. R. Bell, K.C., represented the City of Halifax, and while they are willing

Deaneries of Hastings and Prince Edward Meet at Madoc

Conference of Church of England Well Attended

MADOC, Nov. 10. — On Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 4th and 5th, the combined Church of England Deaneries of Hastings and Prince Edward, held a conference in Madoc. Preparations were made by the members of the Parish of Church of St. John the Baptist, to entertain the clerical and lay delegates during their stay in Madoc with luncheon and supper served in the Masonic Hall and those desirous who stayed over were entertained at the rectory and other homes of the village.

The conference opened with a celebration of Holy Communion with the rector, the Rev. F. Gaisley Reynolds as celebrant, and Rev. Percy Heywood, M.A., D.D. of Trenton as the preacher, there being about seventy communicants. Rev. F. Gaisley Reynolds gave the beautiful text, Agnes Dei, Miss L. Hart, organist.

In the afternoon, there were business sessions, from two to five o'clock, the women workers of the Women's Auxiliaries and Guilds of the Deaneries meeting in the Church of England Sunday School, chairmanship of Mrs. H. Williams.

The meeting was opened by the Rev. F. Gaisley in unison and prayer led by Canon Swayne, Canon Missioner, Diocese of Ontario—followed by an earnest address by Canon Swayne on Missions. The diocese, he explained, extends from Cardinal to Trenton with, thirty-five self-supporting parishes and twenty-one missions. Canadian problems to-day are about one thousand one hundred and twenty-three families and nearly five thousand souls. Speaking of missionary privilege, Canon Swayne urged all present to faithfully labor to help the diocese to carry out its full reports and full returns so that all this work might be carried on throughout this year of urgent need.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Seager, D.D. of the Diocese of Ontario, was then called on, and after greetings, spoke of his annual visit to the W. A. to mission work in outlying fields. In this year of depression and unrest need, the bishop said, it is necessary to put first things first, and to keep up mission work and lessen parish expenses where possible. Each member should also contribute he said, not merely the needs of families.

Miss Edgar, of Toronto, returned Sunday, spoke from India when she then called forward, and gave a most interesting account of the missions in British India, also speaking of the missions of the W. A. in Japan. She told how the women's auxiliaries are, she said, very responsible for the work among the women and children in these places. They support the hospitals, girls' day and boarding schools, and the work of the Bible women. The latter are the helpers in the Bible girls' day and boarding schools, and the work of the Bible women. The latter are the helpers in the zenanas. She told how the hospitals are supported by the British government and by the people in cities, with a small grant from the W. A. The work among the lepers, the speaker said, is most interesting and cheering, especially now that a drug has been discovered a remedy which is successful at least among the most acute cases. The hospital has about seventy cases, but is overcrowded, as there is accommodation is for sixty, and it is hoped to build additional accommodation in the near future. The lepers live in the barrack-like buildings with their wives or family have their own small room and parents, and have a room for prayer, regular drill, and live a pleasant life.

Speaking of mission hospitals, she explained that out-door diseases are held every morning, and for the in-patients the necessary operations attended to. The hospital nurses do not feed their patients on account of the difficulties of caste. Their hymns are Bible stories set to their music, and the gospel story is told to all comers.

Many interesting incidents were told, some very encouraging, while a few were most discouraging.

Mrs. F. C. Anderson of Belleville then gave an address on W. A. work urging those who have not already organized to do so at once. She then urged the forming of the younger people into Junior W. A. where they can be interested in sewing for missions, sending cards for mission children, making much needed bandages clothes and clothing "to order" for church purposes. She says the girls are always willing and eager to work, the chief difficulty being to get leaders to preside and supervise.

During a discussion of W. A. work, Mrs. Crewe of Trenton, suggested that guild work and W. A. work could be combined where it is not possible to have both. Unanimously papers at guild, and while having discussions.

The conference on parish guilds brought out many suggestions of ways and means of raising money for missionary work, such as among others, the annual bazaar and concert, birthday and saint day cards, dime bank, rummage sale, Hallowe'en party, afternoon tea, ward convenors, church groups and sunbeam bands, chairmanship was made for passing on ideas and getting reports from each guild, the president's work easier.

Several interesting were received for direct giving and the canvass to enlist every woman of the parish as member of guild and W. A.

The men's group met in the guild, with the Right Honor Judge Lee-Lean as chairman, beginning with an address on Church Support and Home Missions. A very practical, interesting and instructive talk. Methods of raising money was led by Mr. John Elliott, and it was taken part in by most of those present.

A very earnest address was given by the bishop of Ontario, and was followed by the resolutions and discussions.

After the serving of supper at the Rectory, the Rev. F. Gaisley Reynolds was held. The chair was taken by Mr. B. B. Wright of Deloro, a vestryman of St. John's, and the Rev. Mr. Reynolds, after which the Rev. Percy Heywood, D.D. of Brockville gave an inspiring address on "Christ and Young People." The church has to present to the young people the ideal of fellowship, Religion, he says, is not a series of prohibitions, but a positive thing. The young must be placed in the wrong place. Give them instead a task, because treasure is, there will your heart be also."

An earnest thought-provoking address on "The Church and the Present Situation," was given by the Rev. Canon Swayne, explaining the subject from its moral and spiritual standpoint of Bible truth, the material, the speaker dealt with the problems of the day, and the church, the reasons for this, and what the church can do to help solve some of these things. The church, he says, is at a crossing, and the call to patience and prayer which is made for December 2nd, when the world's people of Canada are called to earnest prayer for world needs.

An offering was taken for the expenses of the conference. Thanks were heartily extended to the ladies who had supplied this bounti-

Mr. and Mrs. J. Briant Celebrate Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Briant of Kingston and Miss Edith Briant of Belleville were in the city on Sunday the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Briant, 44 George St. The occasion was especially at this time as they were unable to be here on Nov. 3, when Mr. and Mrs. John Briant celebrated the anniversary of their marriage, took place at Brixton, England, forty-two years ago on that date. On their anniversary day Mr. and Mrs. Briant were at home and many friends and many persons called to express their congratulations and good wishes. On this day three of their children were present: Mrs. H. Revell of Belleville, Mrs. Wesley Mc-Kay, Toronto and Mr. E. Briant of Oakville. Mr. and Mrs. Briant have been in Canada twenty-six years, and they have been highly respected residents of Belleville for the greater part of that time. They are the proud grand parents of eighteen young Canadians.

Who Will Win Stanley Cup?

This Question Confounds Sport Critics in Canada and States

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 10.—(By Canadian Press)—Who is going to win the 1931-32 edition of the Stanley Cup; are Les Canadiens of Montreal likely to repeat and make it three straight world's champions; will Ship Victoria be a runner-up club of other years prepared to step in and capture the premier trophy; these are three of the most important questions which flash and flicker as the campaign opens, November 19.

Many of the "wise ones" think the flying French-Canadians will be the meeting another world title lie on the shoulders of Howie Morenz, Hainsworth and the rest, with the main factor of the habitants attack in previous campaigns, while others are of the opinion such teams as Toronto, Montreal Maroons, Boston and Chicago will be the ones to give the champs are ready to step up and take holders.

Only six of the eight clubs will swing into action Thursday night as Montreal Maroons and Boston Bruins are scheduled to open their winter season until Saturday night in the Canadian City. The opening draw brings together New York, rangers, and Canadiens in Montreal, New York Americans and Detroit Falcons in Detroit, and Chicago Black Hawks and Toronto Maple Leafs in Toronto.

Canadiens received their first exhibition setback of the season when their Nonpareil Dumart, with Province Reds of the Canadian-American league added the Habitants 4-1. Brilliant goal-tending by Billy Beveridge, former Bruin defender, and recently acquired by the provincial team from the Gilmour and Ottawa aggregation, featured the Reds' victory.

After more than two weeks training four of the Hogan Five combination were engaged in several exhibition contests between two teams picked from that roster. Those in Maple Leafs, returned to their home city rejuvenated after the heavy practice in their new $2,000,000 Sports Palace.

New York Americans broke camp after last week's game in Galt and immediately left for Detroit where they meet the Falcons in the N. H. L. opener. The other two Canadian-American League squads will leave today for New York.

Picton Victors in Both Games

Senior Basketballers Won 39-19 and Juniors 33-14

PICTON, Nov. 10. — The Picton Collegiate basketball teams were victorious in both senior and junior games here on Friday night, defeating the Napanee teams.

The score in the senior game was 39 to 19 and in the junior game it was 33 to 14. The senior team led all the way and showed much improvement over previous games. The games were both fast and inclined to be rough. The gallery was filled with supporters of both teams and school yells were frequently given.

Miss L. Fraser, on of Napanee's players, suffered an injured knee, a ligament being torn. Dr. Howard Walmsley was called and gave medical attention.

Following the games the P. C. I. girls entertained the visitors at lunch, followed by a dance. A pleasant social time was spent.

THE DUTCH ADONIS

In the semi-final bout tonight between Frankie Hart and Bob Nelson, we find two of the fastest men in the "roasting" business hooked up. Hart is one of the finest built men who ever stepped the wrestling ring and his speed is one of the features of the game. His opponent, Bob Nelson, on the other hand, is a rough and ready customer giving or asking no quarter. This bout will be followed by a go between Jack Roquet and Alex Kasaboski. These two will battle the best two out of three falls not to exceed two hours.

All is ready for the big bouts tonight. Fans were added seating yesterday afternoon so that if the crowd turns out to see tough tonight the extra "bump" will at least be ready for the ring. Early this morning Bill Randall had a slight attack of sickness and hastily sent getter the final touches on the show so that neither will be undone to make tonight's entertainment one to be long remembered by Belleville sporting circles.

The advance sale of tickets is far above the expectations of the K.-A.A., and as the seats are thrown open to the first comers it is expected that the fans will be there early. The Belleville Citizens' Band will be on deck and entertain the fans before the curtain-raiser.

Just as a reminder we might say over the card once again for the benefit of those who may not be acquainted, is who battles who. In the open bout, one fall not to exceed forty-five minutes, find Larry La Belle heating up with Trader Horn, the boy of mystery. In the semi-final bout we find Farmer Boyd tackling Frankie Hart, the Dutch Adonis. The final bout will fall to exceed forty-five minutes.

The final and feature bout of the evening will follow when Kogut and Kasaboski mix it up. This pair, sports Alex Kasaboski, the Polish Paderewski, and Kogut are top-notchers and need no introduction to any fan. Kogut, the Ukrainian Cossack, Jack Parker, Toronto's favorite referee, will act as referee at the bouts and can be ascertained this morning, but an announcement will be made by the Ontario Athletic Commission, under whose direction the bouts are staged.

The doors will be opened at 7:30 p.m. so that all will have a chance to get a good seat. The ring is a little closer to the south entrance than usual and the ringside seats will get a break for the fans on the north side.

Tomorrow afternoon, Remembrance Day, the Peterboro Collegiate will meet the B. C. I. in their return game of the intercollegiate senior semi-finals. The game will be played at 2:30 p.m. at the Albert College field. Coach Shiels, although the team is down 26 points, feels that they have a chance to overcome the score of the Peics. The boys are a little discouraged over their showing in the Lit. Luck Town last Saturday afternoon, but they claim that with a little encouragement on the part of the Belleville sporting fans they will "bring home the bacon".

X X X

Over 2,000 rabid, howling Peterboro fans were on hand to witness the game last Saturday afternoon. If the Belleville football team could have had that host of that many home supporters there would at least have been a shock. The kids have displayed real fighting spirit all year and now that they have their backs to the wall it is interesting to see just how they will stand up under the test. Remember Nov. 11.

Coach Shiels is now counterplotting on taking his juniors into the playoffs for the championship. The juniors have a real smart and clever team and it is to be hoped that the Department will back Coach Shiels in his project.

A number of local citizens have purchased tickets for the opening game of the National Hockey League in Toronto on Thursday night. It is reported that at least fifty local citizens will see the Chicago Black Hawks and Toronto Maple Leafs pry off the season's championship at the new Toronto Maple Leaf Gardens. This new arena is the last word in the line of sporting palaces in the world and reports are to the effect that the game was sold out late last week. Flying Tackles Chief Morsels for the Fans

Kogut and Kasaboski Use This Form of Offensive

ALL-STAR CARD

Patronage Tonight Will Determine Action of Those Responsible

It will be a battle of flying tackles when Jack Roquet, Canadian light heavyweight champion and Alex Kasaboski, stellar Polish entrant meet in the main bout of tonight's show at the Arena. Both specialize in this form of attack made famous by such outstanding graduates of College football as Jim McMillan and "Gus" Sonnenberg. In fact Kogut has made so many bouts by use of the tackle lately that Toronto sports writers have dubbed him "Little Sonnenberg." Kasaboski has also been adopted the tackle after training for some time with Jim McMillan and finds it an effective method of attack. He uses the orthodox hold well and mixes them with other tactics which would be barred were the rules to be really strictly enforced for delights to use elbow smashes, knee to the stomach and even butting with the head. Both are best two out of three falls will decide the winner and they will have two hours for their battle.

Outstanding item will meet in the opener and semi-final, making it an all-star card. Frankie Hart, Dutch Adonis, goes to a screen test in the forty five minute semi-final in which his opponent will be Bob Nelson of Denmark. Both are cautious to meet the Kogut-Kasaboski winner and have been told that they may get the bout if they showed good form.

Trader Horn, the mystery wrestler, may find it a mystery, when he comes to figuring out ways and means of beating Larry Labelle at the Toronto "killer." Labelle, a heavy, tricky grit Haitian, is regarded of almost super-human strength and often incapacitates his opponents.

The show will start at 8.30 and the attendance promises to be a large one. Other brilliant wrestling cards are like to follow and one, giving the fans of the district something to which to look forward.

Kaye Don Recipient From His Friends in Detroit

LONDON, Nov. 10 — Lee Barrett, Secretary of the Yachtmen's Association of America yesterday presented Leon Wakefield, backer of Kaye Don, a bronze plaque commemorating Don's bid for the international speed boat trophy in Detroit.

"We pay tribute to Kaye Don and his sportsmanship," Mr. Barett declared stating that he presented the trophy on behalf of the citizens of Detroit and the yachtsmen of the United States."

Lang is K O'd but Parry Wins

Southpaw Lasted Less Than Round. Parry Won in 2nd Round

Jack Lang, the Belleville southpaw, who attracted much attention in his previous bout in Toronto went down to defeat via the knock-out route at the hands of Paul Hansen of Denmark last night at the Arena Gardens in Toronto, the fight was of short duration but during the 1.10 minutes of action that fans saw some real fighting and although he was K.O.'d Lang still has the respect of the Toronto boxing fans for his aggressiveness.

Freddy Parry, the second Belleville boxer on the card, knocked out his opponent in the second round. George Tweed of Toronto, was Parry's opponent and Parry wore him down in the first round and finished with a left to the jaw cross in the middle of the second round. Tweed was plenty of action during the time that both Belleville boys were in the ring and Detroit mentor, Harry Robinson, was assured that both boys would be assured of a return bout in the near future.

How that Belleville has made somewhat of a hit in the boxing circles in Toronto is evident the line is ripe for a local card to be staged.

WEATHER BALMY

MOOSE HARBOR, Ont, Nov 10—Moose Harbor on James Bay, one of the most northerly points of civilization in Ontario joins the rest of the evolution in conditions which prevail throughout the province in balmy weather. Inhabitants of Ontario's most sea-port claim the need calling for the coolest and most comfortable clothing is required it and get it back in order.

upon the benefits which he believes may be produced by next year's disarmament conference.

"My government intends to pursue a policy of peace and goodwill," he said. "They will continue their active interest in the work of the League of Nations, and they will give close attention to preparations for the approaching disarmament conference, a successful result of which would produce great and universal benefit."

Then, wearing a priceless crown and robe, sat on his left, On the King's right was the Princess of Wales, in scarlet and ermine. Light shone from the lofty ceiling upon a blaze of jewels worn by the wives of the Peers. They sat on either side of the House and the Lords were packed closely in the centre.

Rode in State

The King and Queen rode to Westminster in state, cheered by thousands of their subjects as their golden coach rolled behind an impressive escort of Household Cavalry from Buckingham Palace to the House of Parliament.

A brilliant sun came out as the ceremony started, but before Their Majesties reached Westminster it was spattering once more.

The King, barebeaded and wearing a heavy overcoat, leaned forward to bow and smile through the open window of the coach each as six horses drew it down the specious Mall. On his right in the second seat sat Queen Mary in the throng. Before their carriage another escort of Horse Guards conveyed the Regal Crown from St. James Palace.

The Prince of Wales, with sword at his side, was cheered all along the route.

In the London Chamber glittered British uniforms of the diplomatic corps. From the galleries distinguished visitors looked down, many of them Indian potentates here for the Round Table Conference.

"I think you all will agree with me that his well-known energy will produce the maximum result," was the tribute paid by Premier Mackinter to his old Labor colleague and friend.

It was a brilliant scene. The House of Lords, crowded by its full assembled guests with enthusiastic cheering.

Mr. MacDonald further announced that:

1—The government intends taking steps to stabilize the pound on gold basis, which will mean that it is independent of speculative movements, or any day transactions.

2—The government proposes to do its utmost to assure success for the disarmament conference to be held in January or February next.

3—Wheat quota constitution is drafted for India it must work. "I'll be no use giving to India a constitution that does not work. It must give liberal peace to India," said Mr. MacDonald.

4—In view of the present position of the world time is to be lost," the Prime Minister proceeded, his voice touching deep tones, on a series of piecemeal, ephemeral commercial treaties purely bargaining will not meet the circumstances. A comprehensive and firm settlement is required. All states must make concessions, for the simple reason that if they do not the world will go from bad to worse with bankruptcy and revolution as the only way out."

There were hopeful signs of trade revival, proceeded Mr. MacDonald. Unemployment figures are down, but the government must not be lulled into false security. "We are living in conditions which arose from and since the war. We face a world supply and demand calling for the coolest and most considered action. Nations

CORRECT CLOTHING FOR MEN

In a reference to the Hoover debt moratorium, Prime Minister MacDonald asked: "Who can say what would have happened had the United States president remained mere by a national figure, or had been discouraged by the obvious difficulties of his proposal?"

Examination of the present crisis leads inevitably back to the essential principle of the economic care of Europe, continued Mr. MacDonald. This had been attacked by many commissions and by certain governments, but sooner or later the question of reparations and war debts entered, said the United States has let it be known these questions have a direct bearing upon disarmament."

Pledging the government's support in the cause of political peace for Europe, the Prime Minister hoped for an understanding between France and Germany, "which must be recognised as an essential condition of success for the Geneva Europe." Washington already had moved in this direction, and the government of Great Britain was prepared to back it in its work, he said.

PROFIT-TAKING CAUSES DROP

Speculators Take Their Profit in Grain and Step Aside

Chicago, Ills., Nov. 10. — Grain tumbled from their recent high levels Monday as speculators took their profits and stepped aside.

Opening quotations on the Chicago Board of Trade showed wheat contracts from 3-4 to 3 cents lower than Saturday's close with a heavy turnover at the start. It was a rapid drop with a range of as much as one cent in the opening figures. December hit 66, 2 1-2 cents under the recent high price for the season.

Corn was from 1-4 to 1 1-2 cents lower in sympathy with wheat.

December at 42, was 2 cents under last week's best figures.

Rye again was independent and opened 3-4 cents higher on brisk purchases.

The early selling appeared to be the accumulation of weak and overbought stocks, although the rallies in other ground-floor industrial issues throughout the week was again in line with little difference in the price level of the leaders and on the Chicago floor, whereas there is usually a spread of several cents.

THANKS!

The following letter was received by Mrs. W. H. Merry, president of Victoria Ave. Baptist Church Women's Missionary Circle.

"20 Indian Trail, Toronto, 3, November 7, 1931.

"Dear Mrs Merry:

"On behalf of the Women's Baptist Home Mission Society of Ontario West, please let me extend to you and the Circle Church at Belleville, our deepest thanks for the very hearty welcome and open-handed hospitality extended, by your church and its members to our delegates at the recent convention.

"Especially, do we extend our thanks to you, the president of the Mission Circle. Your loving, kindly, well chosen and well expressed address of welcome made us all feel quite at home in Belleville church and among its members.

"We appreciated the services rendered by the organist, the music contributed much towards making our convention a success and the special music rendered by the soloists added greatly to the brightness and the spiritual atmosphere of the meetings.

"Please extend to the caretaker our thanks for his labors and his care and oversight of our comfort.

"The women of the Belleville church and Mission Circle served us with such an excellent lunch and tea on our arrival, prepared such a sumptuous banquet on Thursday, and such a delightful joint board luncheon on Friday, they were so careful and so anxious about our physical comfort and well being that we cannot fail to appreciate their great kindness and loving care and service towards us.

"We thank the Belleville ladies who so graciously opened their homes to the visitors, and who entertained us so well during convention week. The cars that met incoming delegates and brought them quickly and safely to the church; and that in time 'sped the parting guest' made us feel 'speed' was even in a strange city.

"The neat office and check room, managed so efficiently by their cheerful young staff were a great help to the rest of us, and we enjoyed meeting the young ladies in charge.

"We extend also the thanks of us from the Mayor of Belleville. In making us welcome in his city, it is felt that his interests lay not alone in civic matters, but in missionary and spiritual affairs.

"Also we extend our thanks to the press, for courteous, prompt, and careful reporting of all meetings; and to those who so thoughtfully arranged for our visit to the School for the Deaf, and to the pupils for that we all thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed.

"To the minister of the church we wish to express our thanks. Mr. Jones did a very great deal to make our convention a real success. His car was always at the disposal of visitors—he was ready to take us wherever we wished to go. He and a friendly deacon were always on the spot to see everything possible for our comfort at the church or anywhere in the city.

"Please extend our thanks to all mentioned in this letter and to all others who in any way contributed to the success of our meetings. We thank you all for a very happy and successful convention and one that will long stand out brightly in our memory.

"On behalf of the Women's Baptist Home Mission Board.

"GUILTY HANDS" SOMETHING NEW IN MYSTERIES

Lionel Barrymore Scores

Lionel Barrymore turns in a magnificent bid for the dramatic acting honors of the year as the murderer in Raymond Griffith's first original for the talkies "Guilty Hands," which opens at the Belle tomorrow.

There has been talk of audiences being tired of this, that and the other type of story. They wanted now. To be sure, there have been something new, which have been mystery thrillers. But nothing like this. If you have a wife of the screaming type, don't take her to you. Pins and needles play tag, up and down your spine. Even if you're bald you'll leave the show with hair standing on end. When the dead body, with pistol in hand and the world thrilled fell you will about the startling climax.

Clever Direction

Nerve, fearful story, on stage or screen, have we witnessed so exciting a mystery play. It is at-tight, gripping in every detail, absolutely original and different in every respect W. S. Van Dyke, who ought to know a few things about thrills after "Trader Horn," has turned in a remarkable piece of directing and, assembling the most dramatic material he had to work with is to be credited with a magnificent achievement.

The cast, too, is exceptional, including Kay Francis, and Hills Madge Evans, who used to be a child star, and now is grown up to be a regular leading lady—and a good one, too. William Bakewell, naive and charming, is teamed with Madge in the romantical-like menace who all but catches his interest. Mae Francis is another mouse.

Most unusual in point of story, characterizations and screen treatment, this, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature is bound to create fresh interest in the mystery type of screen play. It has an astonishing way of keeping you completely baffled when you thought you had everything figured out, and the ending is absolutely startling. Nothing like it has ever been done on stage or screen.

"PENROD AND SAM" MAKE YOU FORGET YOUR TROUBLES

They Tot Revue On Stage

You find many things to fret about in real life, but imaginary things you just can't get your minds away from. But there's a picture on the way which will make you fretless for one evening at least. It is "Penrod and Sam", the First National production featuring Leon Janney and Junior Coglan, and coming to the Belle Theatre Friday next. "Penrod and Sam" is a clever picturization of the adventures of Booth Tarkington's immortal Penrod Schofield and Sam Bassett—and their freckle-faced, stubby-toed gang. Its forgetting Herman and Verman, the pickaninnies—and the funny old mutt, Duke You really owe it to yourself and your family to take them all to the Belle Theatre to see "Penrod and Sam."

Novel and delightful entertainment is announced for presentation on the stage Friday evening, and Saturday afternoon and evening when the Tiny Tot Bathing Beauty Parade will be presented, this parade will consist of Cute, Clever Children ranging in age from One to Six.

Showing Today and Wednesday

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" yesterday scored what was easily one of the biggest successes ever witnessed on the opening of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," as an exciting picture, "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," starring William Farnum, and which is now showing at the Capitol Theatre, today and Wednesday, is a courtly and modern version of the old story that can American stage version. This original picturization was written by H. S. Parker, novelist and director, who has shown success. The Lady Frank Holt, the earth thriller "Sant Judy Bronco," and one of the recent season among horses, "The Cruise Lawn," so given his prominent ability to handle sensational story successful roadshow attractions.

The Mack Wilson was adapted and directed by Mr. Parker.

In transforming "Ten Nights," he has written a real human document, a screen play which has all the ingredients of a thrilling human interest drama swiftly and dramatically told, telling a poignant story of a great father love with rare sympathy and understanding. Mr. Farnum's remarkable given William Farnum the opportunity to develop one of the finest characterizations of a strong man's downfall and regeneration which that splendid actor portrays with gripping realism.

The amazing climax of "Ten Nights In a Bar-Room" comes with the great fight between William Farnum and Tom Santschi. It rebuilding

XMAS TREES FOR U. S. STATES

Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Ship Many

Halifax, N.S.—(By The Canadian Press)—Santa Claus must be getting on apace, for thousands of his Christmas trees are being cut these days in the rural districts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—and to hold presents for Maritimers but to brighten thousands of homes in the big cities of United States.

Some years ago small shipments of the evergreens were made to the American market, and the business has grown until it is now looked upon by the farmers as quite an industry. It is expected that more than two hundred carloads of trees will be shipped from Nova Scotia this fall, and an equal number from New Brunswick.

Not only does this business bring welcome dollars to the farmers here and there throughout the provinces but it provides an annual income for some operators who go at the cutting on a large scale. One operator in New Brunswick is employing forty-five men.

The trees are shipped to the New York market, to Philadelphia and other points in Pennsylvania, and as far west as St. Louis in Missouri and Youngstown in Ohio. An operator from Youngstown is now working around Londonderry, Nova Scotia, with a crew of men.

It does not appear that the cutting of these Christmas trees has any effect in depleting the forests according to the Department of Lands and Forests, and it brings in additional revenue.

A bill was introduced in the last Minnesota legislature which provided for a state bounty of $100 for every child born.

NOVA SCOTIA HONORS DEAD

Ninety War Memorials Will Be Decked With Poppy Wreaths

Halifax, N.S.—Nova Scotia's ninety war memorials will be decked with poppy wreaths on Remembrance Day. In announcing that the government would carry out as yearly practice of placing wreaths, entirely apart from the armistice anniversary ceremonies of their organizations, Hon. J. Fred Fraser, provincial secretary, said he believed the people of the province were anxious the official recognition be continued.

The wreaths are made for the government by returned soldiers in the veteran's shops.

Cumberland county leads in the number of tokens set up to honor the men overseas, having eight memorials, at Nappan, Malagash, Pugwash, Parrsboro, Oxford, Springhill, Amherst, and Wallace. Great Halifax, Richmond, Pictou, Kings and Yarmouth each have seven.

COULD NOT EXPECT AUSTRALIA TO AGREE

Canberra, Australia, Nov. 10.—Public opinion in the Commonwealth government spokesmen today said Great Britain should not expect Australia at the next Imperial Conference to agree to reduce duties on British goods, largely because such expectations can only produce disappointment as far as the present Government is concerned.

At the same time the Government was reported disturbed over reports in London that the conference might be postponed until next June.

Alberta is Setting Fine Butter Record

EDMONTON, Alberta — (By the Canadian Press)—Creamery butter production in the Province of Alberta this year will probably set a new record, according to Dr. Market, Provincial Co-dioner, who states that the output is now 323 per cent greater than last year at this time. The Edmonton Journal, in an editorial announcing that Alberta's dairy industry is staging a remarkable advance says:

"It was in 1924 that the highest figures to date, 22,239,857 pounds, was reached. In the first five years of the province's existence, 1906, it was less than 2,000,000 and the advance had been almost continuous, set-backs having occurred in only two years. It was accordingly very disappointing to have a retrogression after 1929, until in 1932 the total had fallen to 14,373,656. Thus a large amount of ground has been regained in three years.

"The recovery has taken place in the face of lower prices and doubts has been expressed whether those who are giving increased attention to dairying are acting in their own interests. That they are making no mistake is the conclusion of the editor of "The Co-weil" who, in the last issue, analyses the position of the Alberta butter producer. No. 4 wheat brought 56c a bushel in Edmonton at the time that the article appeared. He calculated that marketing through the dairy cow, producing butterfat at the present price of 16 cents a pound, a return of $1.20 per bushel could be obtained. Ten cents a bushel oats returned, by means of the cow, 60 cents. The hope was expressed that, with the tariff against imported butter, cream prices would be higher during the winter months. But, even if they were not, it would certainly pay to go on milking cows.

"The reopening of the British market for Canadian butter has been a most encouraging development. The first shipments from Alberta to the old country in five years were made early in July. The depreciation of the pound may temporarily impede the movement but from all indications it will not have any serious influence. Just before the gold standard was abandoned, the Canadian dairy commissioner, Dr. Ruddick, on his return from Britain declared that Canadian producers can market as much butter in Britain as possible, with the assurance of a ready demand." His prospects were very "very good and it was all a matter of keeping up with the supplies."

RUSSIAN PEASANTS ARE SEEKING AID

Buffalo, N.Y., Nov. 10—Alfred M. Bingham, managing editor of the Buffalo Evening News and secretary of the American Association of Newspaper Editors, today made public a petition signed by 270 Russian Peasants and German colonists in Barbin, China, pleading for aid in preventing their deportation to Russia.

The petition, forwarded to Mr. Kirchhofer by G. Grachoff, sets forth that priests and other clergymen are being persecuted by Soviet authorities, are forced to labor under command of young Communists and that many have been put to death, their churches being converted by the use of Atheists

Students Speaking Only Latin Baffled by Soup

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 12—Fifteen members of the Harvard Classical Club sat down to dine this last night, resolved to speak only in Latin. Waitresses gazed at them in astonishment, which is the more surprising since waitresses in Harvard houses are not astonished easily, when they were asked for one hot lactaria (ahhrrrd ega.) The best was easy, for sausage became pork miracuii; then the worried schoolmen had an unsavoury soup. There was a period of silence as a sickly smile broke over the features of each. No one present knew the ingredients, much less the translation, but the soup was eaten in English if not in silence. The dessert which a good many had by—Ah—in Latin? Mensa with recoil mechanism of the guns even in 50 degree zero weather. And no trouble was experienced with premature shell explosions. Shell passage in that clear, frosty air could be heard from the moment of discharge until impact. "H. E." shrieks bombarding enemy block houses, was a washout in the winter as most of it runs ground targeting to make the shell ricochet at any "angle of fire". Shrapnel bullets found unsatisfactory in the air as long as ten minutes, and high explosive shells would burst up the echo of a little 18 pdr. until it sounded like a French field gun. There were on "the Russian front" besides bombarding enemy 18pdrs, one 60 pound naval rifle and two 4 5s. The enemy were equipped with nearly all naval guns of strong sleds, in all variations of weights, and hundreds of spiteful little one-pound Pom Poms, the shell of which sounded like swift angry hornets, but very, very devastating. The Canadian gunners were also mounted on and fired from runners.

Owing to the rigors of the climate and country neither side cared to undertake attacks, and the Canadians who were unfortunate enough to be captured were promptly dispatched with exceeding slowness and very little food. The Canadians act which every true "Bolo" carried in his belt as conversation with the enemy never carries his watch. They were also dispatched as it.

The brigade, being composed of men from Nova Scotia to British Columbia, have never had a Christmas of their own, but every five years "The Polar Bears," a Detroit, Michigan, regiment, have fought — with the Canadians up there, have a grand time in the city, and very many Canadians attend. There have been Christmas Day letters on that epic sojourn. One was written by an officer who had been a Rhodes scholar, and the other is a battery diary written by the Canadian officer in charge which is very interesting and are of great historical value, and the Dept. would be glad to let anyone see them.

Perhaps, as yet, there is not known among very many in Belleville that Canada took part in the war with Russian, back in 1918.

Fought for Months in Russia After Armistice Day

Belleville Man Sole Survivor of Ambush, Nov. 13th, 1918

GRAPHIC STORY

While there has been a lot of attention at this particular time of the year focused on the activities of various Canadians fighting units in France, how many Belleville people know that there is still living in Belleville at least one man who fought in an active artillery unit months after the armistice was signed, and was, in fact, wound while on a gun crew in connection with four others who were all killed except himself when ambushed in a woods on November 13, of which tomorrow will be the thirteenth anniversary?

The 16th Brigade of the Canadian Field Artillery were recruited in England from men who had been returned from France, mostly, but there were a few green recruits in it also. It consisted of two complete batteries and a headquarters staff, under the command of Colonel Sharman, C.B.E.

The brigade left Dundee, Scotland, in September, 1918, and fought continually through the drive which finally broke the line, ended by Imperial troops of the standing army in the early fall with what time the ice in the White Sea had melted and been sufficiently broken by an ice-breaker, to let a ship come in.

When artillery men read that gun pits were scarcely ever built, and that every gun pit was personally employed, almost to the exclusion of the field families, "Old Dial Sight", and that gun spade trails were invariably built on with in a complete circle to enable them to fight from either side, as often, almost, as they did "section, event then they'll appreciate the difficulties this brigade labored under, and, incidentally, they'll wish that has been the case, because it is now proverbial or axiomatic that the best gunners were really interested in the late Great War are artillery officers and their "Number Twos" on the guns.

To indulge in technicalities for the benefit of these particular readers: No trouble was experienced with recoil mechanism of the guns even in 50 degree zero weather. And no trouble was experienced with premature shell explosions. Shell passage in that clear, frosty air could be heard from the moment of discharge until impact. "H. E." shrieks bombarding enemy block houses, was a washout in the winter as most of it runs ground targeting to make the shell ricochet at any "angle of fire". ARMISTICE NIGHT SCENES IN ALBERT HALL DESCRIBED

Miss Lucy Doyle of Toronto, Speaks to Canadian Club

VALUE OF BUYING

Solemn scenes at the annual Armistice Night services in Albert Hall in London, were brought vividly before the minds of the members of the Women's Canadian Club on Tuesday at luncheon in the Quinte Hotel, when well known Canadian journalist, described the ceremonies which had taken place when the Imperial Conference had met in London.

The occasion of Miss Doyle's address to the Canadian women was that of the Club at the Hotel Quinte. About sixty guests were present and the speaker was introduced to the audience by Mrs. E. R. Logie, president of the club.

The problems of economics and migration formed the chief portion of discussion at the Conference at which all the Dominions were represented should be studied by Canada, Miss Doyle explained, in order that they be better citizens.

"When you realize the buying power in the hands of the women of the country you know," said Miss Doyle, "that the women have the remedy of depression in our hands. If every woman, and I include her head that when she bought things she should say 'Where is this going to mean?' there would be a 'slump' in the depression.

"If instead of us being faced with a loan of several million dollars to help unemployment, we could put into circulation by women buying, the Government would not be an immense factor in the economic situation of Canada.

"We are almost faced with the question of having doles in Canada," said Miss Doyle, "With our country's past built by people who had the courage to overcome great dangers, we, their descendants, are not ready to sit down and be satisfied with doles."

Miss Doyle gave an engrossing account of her experiences at the Imperial Conference. The whole spirit there was one of unity and the desire for peace, for every economic co-operation within the Empire was discussed.

In a dramatic and forceful manner, Miss Doyle described the thrilling scenes she had witnessed while in England.

There was the opening of Parliament with the King and Queen in all their state, the Queen's face passed through the streets in the royal coach, the bowing to salutation and cheers of throngs one felt the deep devotion and loyalty of the British monarchy. In contrast to this colorful scene was the solemn and impressive scene of the R101 tragedy were laid to rest.

Miss Doyle briefly outlined the deliberations that took place at the Imperial Conference and the views of which was the decision to meet at Ottawa in 1932 for the meeting. She now been decided to be held in Canada, in July 1932.

In conclusion Miss Doyle's address was her compelling word picture of the Armistice Night services in Albert Hall. Ten thousand people filled the tremendous building, six soldiery was present from every unit of the British Empire, their uniforms, the regimental colors, made an unforgettable scene. Massed bands of pipers stalled glass window ever seen. Miss Doyle told of the silence by the radiant-faced Prince, the music of ten thousand voices and finally the silence after a million poppies in four days had been sold by women for every man in the Empire who had given his life during the Great War.

Mrs. Logie expressed the appreciation of the audience for one of the most interesting addresses given by the club after which two minutes of silence was observed.

AMENDMENT TO THRONE SPEECH MOVED FRIDAY

Sir Stafford Cripps Will Move the Labor Amendment

NO POLICY

Lack British Initiative to Deal With Outstanding Problems

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Sir Stafford Cripps in the House of Commons next Friday will move the Labor party's official amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It regrets the government has exhibited no policy for dealing with unemployment, public ownership or control, the prin cipal industries including agriculture, banking and the financial machinery of the country. The amendment is moved for its apparent lack of British initiative in international action to deal effectively with the outstanding and vital problems of world politics, especially international currency exchanges and all the factors which are at present contributing economic barriers against the freed flow of international trade."

The Labor amendment regrets further there was no mention in the speech from the throne of any intention of reversing "the unjust economic measures" which have been employed and other classes of persons in increasing the development and social services."

Another amendment, offered by the left wing forces of the Labor party, calls for the immediate ending in the unemployment benefit.

FALLEN HEROES REMEMBERED

Memorial Ceremony is Held in Thurlow Township

Citizens of Thurlow township assembled in the midst of their various activities yesterday at eleven o'clock to honour those who had laid down their lives in the Great War.

An impressive memorial service was conducted by Captain Arthur Ayland of the Church of England, after a hymn, prayer, and Scripture reading by the Canadian Legion. The audience formed round the cenotaph, where Captain Ayland read the part:

"To-day we pause to honour the sons of this township who at the call of Country laid down their lives that we might live and while thirteen years have passed since the fallen boys killed overseas, we must be kept forever in the hearts of the people of Canada, for the sacrifice which they collectively made has been written deep and its fruits for years have not lessened but have rather added to the responsibilities of the present in the cause of freedom and humanity."

The names of those who paid the supreme sacrifice were then read and then two minutes' silence was observed. The crowd dispersed, will thereby Harry Little was fatally injured. Dr. Tennent, coroner of Picton, was notified and by convey B. C. Donnan will examine the witnesses.

IN SONG AND STORY REMEMBER NOV. 11

LATE FALL YIELDS FINE BOUQUET

To pluck roses, flowering shoes, carnation pinks, and snapdragons on November eleventh is surely a novelty. This was the experience of Mrs. A. L. Sullman on Wednesday, when she went out to look at the rosebush preparatory to covering it for the winter. She picked four buds and also left some on the bush. A very fine late autumn bouquet was the result of the visit to the flowering bush and the flower garden.

UNVEILING OF WAR MEMORIAL

21st Battalion Present Memorial To Kingston

It is a year since there has been such a gathering in Eastern Ontario as assembled in Kingston on Remembrance Day afternoon, to witness the unveiling of the memorial on this event. At 3.30 o'clock, some 5,000 to 6,000 people had filled the Memorial Park and street entrance to the park to witness and join in the dedication of the memorial. The throng was augmented by the arrival of one of the finest parades that the Limestone City has witnessed in years.

The King's and Battalion colours of the old 21st were escorted by a detachment of some seventy ex-members of the unit in marching order and wearing their war-time steel helmets, and though there were years and more have passed since drill was the order of the day with them, they would do credit to a active militia unit. The parade was in charge of Col. Gordon Wilkins of Kingston, the ex-members of the 21st Battalion, the Canadian Legion and Queen's C.O.T.C.

The memorial presented by the battalion who sacrificed their lives for King and Country, pulled off with much interest and the fine veiling the monument. Mrs. O. A. Paisley and Mrs. J. J. Hoover of this city, were on the platform in front of the memorial and took part in this part of the ceremonies.

The singing of O Canada and the dedication of the memorial, the parade was again formed and in its return to the Armouries, was received by Major-General Sir Archibald Cameron and Lieut.-Col. H. R. Pense, O.C., of the 21st Battalion during the passing of the troops in review.

C. W. L. MET

Boys of St. Michael's Academy were speakers at the regular monthly meeting of the Catholic Women's League. The topic was "Resolved that Canada is a better place in which to live than the United States. The affirmative side was upheld by Jack Mulholland and Gerald Doran while Robertson Collins and Jack Sheppard supported the negative side of the proposition.

The young debaters spoke well and presented many points for argument, the decision in the contest that the judges, Miss A. Sweeney, Miss S. Riordon and Miss A. Gallagher, had a difficult time in making their decision. The affirmative side, however, was declared the winner having had the larger number of points.

The work of the young speakers was warmly parised by the president of the League, Mrs. F. Flintoft, who was in the chair.

A business meeting of the league followed the debate.

WARN OF DANGER OF WET ROADWAYS

Warning was issued by the traffic department of the Provincial Police this morning in regards to the slippery pavements and especially the wet leaves that lie on the paved highways. The officers on the highways state that although the pavement may be dry on the surface if there are any leaves lying on the road they remain damp and under side and caution should be used by motorists in applying their brakes too fast when driving over such leaves. As soon as the leaves retain moisture and when the brakes of a car are applied there is no way they can afford to grip on the road. The traffic officers have warned and enough to warn the public as to this danger and it is hoped that the motoring public will take advantage of this valuable information that has been handed down by the local traffic officers.

ANTHEM PLAYED AT MEMORIAL HALL

Those who attended the Remembrance Day service at the armouries lawn yesterday morning have wondered why the National Anthem was not sung there. In arranging the event, those in charge thought it appropriate to omit it this, till previous to the parade being dismissed. On arrival at Memorial Hall, the veterans and sea cadets marched past the band but then made a left turn facing the building called to attention and the band then played God Save the King.

I.O.O.F. MEETING AT TEMPLE HERE

Temple Wednesday night. Bro. Smith of Trenton, District Deputy for that district, and Bro. Carlisle of Stirling, District Deputy for District number 46 and District Deputy W. J. Bowen of Deseronto. A plan of campaign was considered to increase interest in the order and to attract new members. At the banquet, which followed the conference, District Deputy Smith of Trenton presided at toast master. An optimistic address was delivered by the Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Sire, R. E. Ketchason, Past Grand Patriarch, Deputy Grand Master Pratt, Deputy Percy Ransom, Past District Deputy and others.

THREE TRANSIENTS ARE HELD HERE

Three young men, who passed Wednesday night in the transient room at the city police station, were detained this morning by constable for investigation. Two of them are only sixteen and seventeen years of age and had left home and from place to place just because he took a notion to. The one who is sixteen years old, has been in this country fifteen months and from what he says he has no desire to work. The last of the trio is a few years older. He says that he was an inmate at the mental hospital at Orillia and was placed on a farm on probation from which he ran away.

ALBERT COLLEGE STUDENTS' TRIBUTE

Students, young and old, engaged in their commemoration services for fallen heroes in the Memorial Chapel at Albert College Wednesday morning. Classes were dismissed before eleven o'clock and all students, staff and teachers assembled in a body.

After a solemn two minute silence a wreath was placed at the foot of a list of the names of old graduates who were killed in the late Great War and which was donated by the scholars and other older graduates of that famous institution. Dr. Bishop gave a stirring address to the students in which he appealed to them to always keep their memory fresh for the boys who were as they once, but when he Call had come had marched off, some never to return again. But the conclusion hymns were sung in this beautiful chapel which was donated them by the alumni in memory of those students who had gone but whose memory is ever freshened as the anniversary rolls around.

LONDON POLICE HEARD IN N. Z.

Wellington, N. Z., Nov. 13 (C.P. via Reuters)—So successful was the broadcast of the Armistice Day services at the foot of the cenotaph in Whitehall that listeners were able distinctly to hear the words of the service as they directed the movement of the crowd in Whitehall.

Remembrance Day Elsewhere

Ministers Speaks in Picton

PICTON, Nov. 12—Remembrance Day was observed by the closing of all places of business and a memorial service at the Cenotaph. Rev. S. H. Bond was the special speaker. War Veterans, Collegiate Cadets, Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, hundreds of school children, members of Town and County Councils and College students paid their part in a parade. In the evening the veterans held a banquet in honor of the Hon. D. M. Rutherland, Minister of National Defence, and Lieut.-Col. G. R Parke, the Royal Military College, Kingston, guest speakers.

Washington, Nov. 12—Declaring the world is far from the ideals of peace which men envisaged on the first Armistice Day thirteen years ago, President Hoover, in dedicating the district of Columbia memorial to the Great War dead, called upon statesmen to develop a new conception among nations not only that a resurrence of bloodshed must be avoided but that the world might be lifted out of its present economic difficulties as a result of the Great War."

London, Nov. 11— While Queen Mary watched from the windows of Whitehall, the Prince of Wales laid a wreath at the foot of the Cenotaph in obeisance to Britain's glorious dead in ceremonies which kept King George indoors, and he solemnly paid the nation's homage in his own stirring words. Big Ben ushered in the two minutes silence and the 1931 Armistice Day was observed.

Ottawa, Nov. 12.—For the thirteenth time Canada observed identically silent in mute recalling of their greatest sacrifice on Nov. 11, 1918, when at 11 o'clock in the morning the magic order "Cease Fire," flashed over the thundering battlefronts and brought peace to a war-weary world. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the far-flung outposts of Canadian in the Canadian Arctic to the populous centres, there was paid tribute to the 60,000 Canadians who died, and honor to those who survived.

Once again the poppy, emblem of the poppy-strewn fields of war in France, blossomed throughout the land, and mingled with the laurel wreaths that reverent hands pl'ced about the Cenotaph in the capital. Men united in memory of those who served.

30,000 at Ottawa

Here, in the National Capital, in the shadow of the Peace Memorial Tower that tops the Parliament Building, was the centre of Canada's memorial gesture. A throng of people estimated to number 30,000 assembled with the Governor-General, the Earl of Bessborough, his staff and members of the Government, at the foot of the Cenotaph, erected in front of the Parliament Buildings.

BOILER PLATE WITHIN RAILS

Saves Ties From Red Hot Coals From Engines

Red hot coals for years have continued to fall from locomotive fire boxes. Wood, as old as it gets, is still inflammable. For years railroad companies have held conferences, have called in experts to settle the matter. Corpulent executives have appointed committees to find ways and means of eliminating or alleviating this evil. Reams of stationery have been made out in triplicate have been dispatched and received in various cities over the land and still in the end, the hot coals fall on the railroad ties, and the railroad ties continue to burn. Spasmodic fires result in stations where the engine stands for a short time is this apparent.

Then someone had a brain flash, something like this: hot coals, cold coals. Cold coals are not a fire risk. No vow'l do. Start over. Fire Chairma, wood, coal, coke—iron—No. Put iron ties down! Iron ties won't work, and they're too costly to maintain anyhow. Then put iron over the ties.

Several men are now engaged at the North Station of the Canadian National Railway in laying boiler plate in the centre of the track at the station. The reason is given that the hot coals dropping from the fire box will be burning the ties, which needed replacement too often.

R. E. SANTER ELECTED W.M.

Eureka Lodge Celebrates Remembrance Day at Fourth Degree

At the November meeting of Eureka Lodge No. 261, A. F. & A.M., the election of officers for the ensuing year was one of the features of the evening. Bro. R. E. Santer was elected W. M. for 1932 and Bro. Newton Thompson will assume the position of I. P. M. next season. The other officers, secretary, treasurer and the auditors were also elected while the minor officers will be appointed by the incoming officers in due time.

After the regular meeting they held their annual Armistice Night programme. The Burdett Lodge orchestra provided the music during the evening and it was of the post-war description. The numbers rendered by the members were well received and they are to be complimented on the excellent manner in which they entertained the brothers. The usual toasts to the Grand Lodge etc., were followed by the "silent toast," to "those who never came back." The Last Post was also sounded in honor of "Our Glorious Dead" and at the close of the evening, Rev. Mr. Reynolds of Madoc Anglican Church, spoke briefly on the subject of Remembrance and its many meanings. The address was appreciated by the brethren who had the privilege of hearing it.

A delightful banquet interval was brought to a close with the singing of the Junior Warden's toast.

TORONTO, Ont. Nov. 13— City Cop Canadian Press — Appearance of "Mahatma Gandhi" in a downtown restaurant caused a mild sensation here last night. Crowds followed the mysterious figure as he walked down Yonge clad not in silk robes but in a sheet. From the sheet hung a placard which said; "Peace for India". With him was a "chela" or "child" in a baby carriage. The mystery was solved when it turned out he was University of Toronto Students undergoing the rigors of a hazing initiation.

Bereaved Woman Not Alone, Lives in Memory with Fallen

Enshrines War Medal as Relic in Prayer-book

WAR'S BURDEN

Reverently they stood there bowed, head worshippers as the booming clock slowly counted off those all too few minutes. Those two minutes which were given only to the dead of Canada's glorious sons whose poor bones still lie in France, in Belgium and the cold wilds of Russia's northern forests. Silently they stood, lips moving in prayer — transported back thirteen and even fifteen years ago when they too remembered the same curly headed boy who marched off into inferno, with a smile on his lips and a gun on his shoulder—to kill some other mother's son and have his bones as well as his own rot in Flanders Fields.

But none so reverent as she who stood on the fringe of the crowd, dressed all in black, oblivious of all save the prayer which her slowly moving lips formed, silently. With eyes closed she stood there; small and slightly grey haired and aged, and in her bony hand she clutched a medal which had been in the prayer book she carried. Worn, shiny, and scuffed it was as if it had been handled and caressed daily in the years that had elapsed. Worn as a result of worn thumbs has been handed down through generations. And as it was she replaced it quietly. There were no tears there. Perhaps a slight moistness in the eyes which transformed the face they were set in, and made their owner stand out pitcherably from the rest, of them. Perhaps in years past there had been tears, but now there was resignation, a calm, sweet resignation as if the inevitable had occurred—as it had—and it was the Maker's will which forced it. The wan face, showed serenity beneath its apparently suffering — a serenity bred of Prayer, good living and close communication with the One to whom the prayer was intended for; a serenity which can be seen on the face of those who have lived as they have prayed their Maker to show them how to live, and have spent their allotted time—and now be still in death—calm, smiling, peaceful death.

She moved slowly, stirred and came to life. Hats were replaced, and again the hundreds of thousands were taken up. Two minutes had elapsed and all over the world millions of prayers had gone winging up to Him who sits in judgment of us all. Millions of prayers for millions of the dead who marched away, fought, bled and died. And who shall say they were in vain—! Who shall say that up there the sons and brothers and husbands are not waiting for us to conclude our short life and hasten up into their company in everlasting bliss.

One wonders if it were her son or her husband who was sacrificed off that fateful day, never to come back; never to be seen again. And one wonders if she does not, as she ties in bed, or kneels in prayer, see him beckoning to come. It must be that which sustains her, which makes her so calm and serene and beautiful. We look again. As the years pass she has awakened from her reverie. The veil which was raised to her lowered over her face and she slips quietly away. The crowd milled around in waves and we lose sight of her. Somewhere in Belleville is the mother of the Unknown Soldier lives and prays and waits for the day, too, when she will join her boy in heaven.

TWO ARE HELD FOR BREAKING

Norwood Theft Probed By Provincial Police

Late Tuesday night the Toronto city police arrested Alex. Cross of Toronto and John Hill of Bobcaygeon on the charge of breaking and entering the Jas. Stone store of H. J. Kempt at Norwood, some time between late last Saturday night and early Sunday morning and stealing goods to the value, it is said, of $286.70.

The District Office of the Ontario Provincial Police and the Belleville city police were working on the robbery from this end and it was learned that these men were in Belleville for a short time prior to their arrest in Toronto.

It is alleged that when these men were arrested they were in possession of a stolen car from Peterboro and also that they had some of the stolen goods in their possession. Provincial Constable Silverster of the Peterboro Detachment has taken the prisoners to Peterboro to stand trial.

HOME MAKERS MEET IN CITY

Women's Institute Convention Opens at Parish Hall

Emphasizing the first words of their motto, "For Home and Country" the members of the Women's Institute of Sidbitvison Four opened their convention in St. Thomas' Parish Hall this morning by a round table conference on the "Art of Homemaking." Nearly two hundred delegates representing branches of Hastings, Northumberland and Prince Edward were present for the beginning of the two-day meeting, the seventh annual convention in Belleville of this section of the Women's Institute of Eastern Ontario.

Registration began at nine o'clock with Mrs. W. Simmons, Latta, convener, in charge, assisted by Miss Annie Maynes and Miss C. Sills, of East Hastings, Ontario.

Present at this session were Mr. George Putnam, of the Department of Agriculture, Toronto, superintendent of Women's Institutes for Ontario; Miss Edna Jaquith, superintendent of Girls' Work; Miss E. J. Guest, Department of Agriculture; Mrs. Nina Moore Jamieson, St. George, Ontario, who will be the guest speaker this evening; Mrs. Chas. Macoun, Campbellford.

Mrs. W. H. Munro, convention president, of Demorestville, Prince Edward County, was in the chair and opened the convention. She contributed a splendid paper on "Home-Making," that was heard with great interest and profit.

In connection with Mrs. Munro's talk there was a demonstration of table setting. Demonstrations were given by representatives of the various districts in convention. These were presented by Mrs. Flavius Wray, Bridge; Mrs. Earl Northminster; Mrs. Clarence Holmes, Wallbridge, West Hastings; Miss Beatrice Jones, Belleville, East Hastings; Mrs. Harold Clark, Campbellford, West Seymour.

Practical suggestions were offered that will prove of real value in making the home a centre of genuine hospitality. Simple methods of adding attractiveness to the living room and dining room were discussed. With slight effort meals in the farm home could have as delightful setting as that of any urban house. Speakers urged the discard of the table cloths as this would teach children to be careful in their table manners; careful attention to the little niceties that make for gracious living; interesting conversation without gossip; importance of discriminating between the luxury of maintaining high powered cars and the real necessity of making the home as attractive as possible; and above all the fine things of spiritual element rather than material were some of the interesting items brought out in the discussion.

Miss Eadie, Toronto, supervisor of Girls' Work, was an interesting speaker at the conclusion of the demonstration summing up the points advanced by the previous speakers.

The rest of the morning was devoted to Group conference.

One thousand gardeners and laborers are employed to keep London's great royal gardens in order.

AT THE SHRINE

Past, present, and future met on Wednesday at the shrine of memory of the war's immortal dead. It was a tribute from those who remembered the glory and boys who sank in death's dark night for the sake of their country, from those who remembered the boys by their final names as they went into the valley and did not return. There met with them those younger people to whom the war is not quite a memory, who have a faint recollection of it but who had only a impersonal touch with the world's tragedy for all that. There assembled also the children of today who knew none of those who had gone never to return, those who had allowed themselves to be made earth and ashes that this country and the other countries of the world might be fit peaceful places in which to rear unborn generations. These latter are the chief heirs of the war dead. Those who remember the fallen are many of them, of the older generation which has already borne its share of the fight of life and who cannot be indefinitely expected to carry on the struggle and the burden of civilization for the younger generation is waiting at its heels to step into the shielding duties of life. And then in the far rear are those young heirs of the blood and sacrifice of Flanders and the other fields of carnage of the war—the heirs who knew not the great men of stout heart who went down the pathway of sacrifice.

These three elements mingled with different motives in the ceremonies throughout the land, at the shrine of remembrance.

How contrasted was the ceremony of Wednesday contrasted with that of the first Armistice Day—that day when the mob emotions ran riot. That scene cannot be duplicated again. That was not the calm celebration of such a year as 1931 when the devotional was to the fore.

Over many came a realization that the war was over for years—and that the world was moving fast forward in time. Things since the war ceased have not been all that men and women desire, and it is no wonder that these people came to the shrine of the war dead and thought that here was buried many a high ideal and that there ought to be a rededication of the living to the carrying out of that noble ideal, believing in which so many millions passed the Great Divide. People could not but feel that the call was for renewal of the charge expressed by the late Col. John McCrea, in the words, "In Flanders' Fields".

"To you with falling hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders Fields."

The ceremony at Belleville brought very near the memory of the departed warriors who died amid the battle smoke, the roar of the guns and the reeking soil of carnage. It kindled in them a new ideal—to strive to be as brave champions of the cause of their country and right as those whose names are honored.

THE FARM AND ELECTRICITY

How much of relief from the burden of farming is provided by the making of a network of electric lines throughout the country was painted by the Hon. J. Robert Cooke, Hydro Commission chairman, last Monday at the farmers' day of the Rotary Club. Mr. Cooke knows because he has been a practical farmer with a very real knowledge of the demands of the work of the farm.

The farm must be made attractive by the elimination of drudgery and by the substitution of everything which will make for a more cheerful life in the countryside. That is one of the chief works of Mr. Cooke and one by which he is known in the minds of the people. He has shown that electricity means more to the country in the way of assistance in the home than it does in the city.

Country life with its attractions can never be city life and city life can never be country life. The two cannot but remain different and no one would like to merge the two for merging would merely wipe out elements of each.

A prosperous countryside and a healthy life in the city are the needs. These will spell a contented people and a prosperous country.

The development of country life to have the highest appeal to the farmer in the ideal and Mr. Cooke is striving. His work is doing much to bring that ideal to complete realization.

Agriculture is given by economists as the foundation stone of national prosperity and those who believe this find proof of this statement in the outbreak through the rise in the price of wheat and the consequent release of frozen funds and the better feeling among the farmers, who are only too willing to spend if they can secure a fair price for their products. On the other hand the city and the town play no small part in the prosperity of the country with their use of the farm products. The two are comolements of the national life.

SINCE I HAVE WALKED WITH PAIN

By Aline Michaelis

Since I have walked awhile with pain
I never can be cold,
I never can harsh again
To hearts that would unfold.
The hazards of their lives to me,
Their burden or their loss,
I share in each man's misery
Since I have known a cross.

Since I have walked with pain I find
That now I understand
The need of being always kind,
Of grasping every hand
Outstretched for alms of love and cheer
And truth and tenderness,
Till ways that once held only fear
I learn at last to bless!

For there I vowed, in paths where pain
And I together trod,
I never would be stern again
To any child of God.

"CANADA CAN LEAD the world into the era of expansion and prosperity which awaits it if Canadians will realize their duties and face them with confidence and optimism," said Hon. Harry H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, in addressing a gathering of Brantford business men recently. That's the spirit which makes a great nation. If our statesmen have vision such as this, then it is up to the average citizen to try and measure up in that vision without which a nation perishits.

WHEAT IS UP. Flour is up and other things are sure to go up. Prices are lower now on all commodities than ever before. The banks are paying three per cent as usual on savings accounts but the stores are paying from ten to thirty per cent in savings on purchases made now. Brisk buying makes prosperity for those employed in the stores and the factories. Sluggish buying slows up the wheels of industry all round. Buy now when the buying is better than it will be for years to come.

MAHATMA GANDI has been immortalized in song, and most of the radio robust singers have been filling the air nightly with with the ode to Mahatma Gandi which declares he is a dandy, and all that sort of thing. What fame for the apostle of passive resistance who by being different from any other man and by his bizarre words and actions, has gained world-wide publicity and in his single cotton garment and loin cloth reached the foot of the throne of Great Britain, there to talk face to face with the Emperor of India and the Kingdoms beyond the seas.

CANADA IS RICH beyond the wildest dreams of avarice, but a good many people don't know it. Believe it or not, it is a fact, vouched for by the Government of Canada, that the saving deposits of Canada have increased during the past year by more than thirty-six million dollars, reaching a total of one billion, and nearly five hundred million dollars. Do you know that the savings deposits in Belleville banks have increased during the past year, to a total of nearly six million dollars? If money is wealth, we are choked with it.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS opens the relief fund of Detroit to care for the unemployed this winter. Senator James Couzens has subscribed one million dollars with an initial payment of $200,000, and four more of the same to come in monthly installments if other wealthy Michigan people will contribute proportionately.
